The mortgagee of an automobile, under a duly recorded mortgage given to secure money borrowed to pay the purchase price of the car, is not estopped from claiming it in the hands of an innocent purchaser for value by the fact that the original seller gave the mortgagor a bill receipted as paid in full, which was delivered by him to his subsequent buyer with the car.—Finance Service Corp. v. VI. EQUITABLE ESTOPPEL; QUASI ESTOPPEL

§ 107. In General

Quasi estoppel has its basis in election, ratification, affirmance, acquiescence, or acceptance of benefits, and the principle precludes a party from asserting, to another's disadvantage, a right inconsistent with a position previously taken by him.

The term "quasi estoppel" has been applied to certain legal bars which are in some respects analogous to estoppel in pais and which have the same practical operation as an estoppel in pais, but which nevertheless differ from that form of estoppel in essential particulars.[70]

The doctrine classified as quasi estoppel has its basis in election, ratification, affirmance, acquiescence, or acceptance of benefits,[71] and the principle precludes a party from asserting, to another's disadvantage, a right inconsistent with a position previously taken by him.[72] The doctrine applies where it would be unconscionable to allow a person to maintain a position inconsistent with one in which he acquiesced, or of which he accepted a benefit.[73]

§ 108. Prior Acts, Claims, or Conduct Inconsistent with Right Asserted in General

a. Statement of rule
b. Elements, extent, and limits of rule

a. Statement of Rule

As a general rule, where a person has, with knowledge of the facts, acted or conducted himself in a particular manner, or asserted a particular claim, title, or right, he cannot afterward assume a position inconsistent therewith to the prejudice of one who has acted in reliance on such conduct.

The doctrine of equitable estoppel precludes a person from maintaining a position or attitude inconsistent with another position or attitude which is sought to be maintained at the same time or which was asserted at a previous time,[74] and, as a general agreement from asserting a claim inconsistent therewith,[83] and a promise which induces reliance by the promisee estops the promisor from defaulting on his promise.[84] A person who has given a certain reason for his conduct touching a matter in controversy will not be permitted, after the situation of the parties has changed, to alter his position to the prejudice of another.[85]

Estoppel by waiver. While waiver is not in the proper sense of the term a species of estoppel,[86] yet where a party to a transaction induces another to act on the reasonable belief that he has waived or will waive certain rights, remedies, or objections which he is entitled to assert, he will be estopped to insist on such rights, remedies, or objections to the prejudice of the one misled.[87] The doctrine of estoppel by waiver, it has been stated, applies in any case to determine the rights of the parties from the time when a mistake of law or of fact becomes known to the party whose rights are affected.[88]

b. Elements, Extent, and Limits of Rule

To constitute an estoppel, the party against whom the estoppel is claimed must have done some act or pursued some course of conduct with knowledge of the facts and of his rights, and, in addition, it is essential that the party claiming the estoppel should have been misled to his prejudice.

To constitute an estoppel by reason of prior acts, claims, or conduct inconsistent with the right asserted, the essential elements of estoppel must exist.[89]

Causing delay in assertion of claim

In action to recover a sum of money awarded plaintiff at "bank night" drawing at a motion picture theater, owners were estopped to claim the advantage of one second's delay on part of plaintiff's husband in claiming prize, where if plaintiff's husband was the one entitled to the prize delay on his part was due to act of owners in permitting their agent to announce the wrong name outside the theater.—St. Peter v. Pioneer Theatre Corporation, 291 N.W. 164, 227 Iowa 1391.

Estoppel of debtor to assert condition of obligation

Right to recover money conditionally owing, notwithstanding condition has not happened because of some act of debtor, rests on estoppel of debtor to insist on the condition; if debtor has acted for purpose of defeating conditional obligation which would probably have accrued, or for purpose of obtaining or retaining benefit at creditor's expense, conditional obligation is converted into absolute obligation, but if there was no likelihood of condition ever happening, and debtor acted in good faith to relieve himself of a useless burden, conditional obligation is not converted into absolute obligation.—Collins v. Mere inconsistency does not give rise to an estoppel, but it is the consequences of the inconsistency which create it.[90]

To constitute an estoppel, it is essential that the party charged therewith should have done, or refrained from doing, some act, or pursued some course of conduct, on which the estoppel may be based,[91] and that in taking the former position he should have acted with knowledge of his rights,[92] and have been aware of the facts in respect of the estoppel claimed.[93] In addition, it is essential that the party invoking the estoppel should have been misled by the acts or conduct of the party against whom the estoppel is claimed,[94] that he changed his position in reliance thereon,[95] and was justified in so doing,[96] and that he was prejudiced thereby[97] or a benefit resulted to the party against whom the estoppel is claimed.[98]

As the doctrine of estoppel rests on equity, a party is not estopped where the equities are in his favor,[99] or where the conduct relied on to create the estoppel was superinduced by the acts of the party invoking the doctrine.[1] In no event can the estoppel be extended beyond the natural and reasonable import of the acts or conduct relied on to create it.[2] A party is not precluded from asserting a claim which is inconsistent with a previous claim not successfully maintained;[3] nor does the assertion of one claim under an express agreement that it shall not prejudice further claims preclude the assertion subsequently of a claim which might, in the absence of the agreement, be deemed inconsistent.[4]

A person is not estopped to assert title to real estate because of conduct with relation thereto at a time when he had no interest in the property,[5] and, likewise, an owner of realty is not estopped by statements to one who, to his knowledge, has no interest in the property, where he has no intention that the

Where the purchaser of an oil lease under oral contract from an equitable owner acquired the lease by direct conveyance from the legal holder at his vendor's suggestion, the giving by him of a check for part of the purchase price, which was certified by his bank, and thereby the amount was withdrawn from his account, was sufficient injury to support estoppel against the vendor to attack his title.—Priddy v. Retention of a copy of a contract for a long period of time does not estop a party from contending that it does not express the agreement of the parties, where he has acted during that period in accordance with his contentions.[7]

Positions not inconsistent. No estoppel arises where the positions taken are not necessarily antagonistic,[8] as where one merely attempts to minimize injury.[9]

§ 109. Acceptance of Benefits

a. In general

b. Elements, extent, and limits of rule

a. In General

Where one having the right to accept or reject a transaction takes and retains benefits thereunder, he ratifies the transaction, is bound by it, and cannot avoid its obligation or effect by taking a position inconsistent therewith.

Benefits from statutes or regulations

(1) Estoppel is frequently based on acceptance and retention of benefits from a regulation or statute by one who had knowledge or notice of facts and might have rejected or contested such benefits.—Rhodus v. Geatley, Mo., 147 S.W.2d 631.

(2) Generally parties seeking or deriving benefit by exercising special privilege bestowed by law are estopped from denying validity of terms fixed as condition for exercising privilege.—Tovrea Packing Co. v. Live Stock Sanitary Board of Arizona, 34 P.2d 420, 44 Ariz. 151.

(3) Where plaintiff chose to accept license of food administration, and to engage in business under its rules and regulations, it could not thereafter challenge legal force of such rules and regulations.—Stein-Hall Mfg. Co. v. H. M. Glossbrenner & Co., 145 N.E. 526, 84 Ind.App. 306.

(4) The establishment of a town by the legislature, and an investiture of the land in trustees, having been procured by the owner of the land, he and those claiming under him are estopped to deny his title at the time, and the title passes thereby to the trustees.—Coleman v. Morrison, 1 A. K. Marsh. Ky., 406.

(5) When the state legislature has by resolve authorized the conveyance of a certain tract of land to a person, he having, it may be presumed, solicited the grant, and having afterwards acted under it, he and those claiming under him are estopped from denying the title of the state.—Cary v. Whitney, 48 Me 516.

(6) Where a member of the legislature, procured a charter to build a bridge, which he subsequently built, it was held that he was not estopped from asserting that he built the bridge, not under the charter, but under an earlier statute which conferred greater privileges on him. —Dougherty County v. Tift, 75 Ga 815.

Where government and taxpayer, by acquiescence in manner of performing act, have given definite character and effect thereto, taxpayer will not be permitted, after deriving benefit therefrom, to change position at government's expense.—Hartwell Mills v. Basis for rule

The rule that a person cannot both benefit by and repudiate an instru-

condition that he who accepts a benefit under an instrument shall adopt the whole, conforming to all its provisions and renouncing every right inconsistent with it.[12]

b. Elements, Extent, and Limits of Rule

To create an estoppel by acceptance of benefits it is essential that the person against whom the estoppel is claimed should have acted with knowledge of the facts and of his rights, and that the party claiming the estoppel should have been without knowledge or means of knowledge of the facts on which he bases his claim of estoppel, and that he be misled to his prejudice.

In order to create an estoppel by the acceptance of benefits, it is essential that the party against whom the estoppel is claimed should have acted with knowledge of the facts and of his rights.[13] and that the party claiming the estoppel was without knowledge or means of knowledge of the facts on which he bases his claim of estoppel,[14] that he was influenced by and relied on the conduct of the person sought to be estopped,[15] and that he changed his position in reliance thereon to his injury.[16] The rule has no application where no injury resulted to anyone except the party against whom the estoppel is claimed.[17]

In addition, it is essential to constitute an estoppel in this class of cases that the benefit received be direct,[18] that the acceptance should not have been induced by false representations,[19] that the transaction and the acceptance of benefits be inconsistent with the claim subsequently asserted,[20] and that its ment rests on the equitable ground that a person cannot claim inconsistent rights in regard to the same subject.—Federal Mining & Engineering Co. v. Pollak, 85 P.2d 1008, 59 Nev. 145.

Claiming and denying status of common carrier

A towing company cannot claim that it is a common carrier, in order to escape the burden of its agreement to notify a party contracting for towage of the time of loading as being a discriminatory privilege or agreement forbidden to common carriers, and at the same time claim that it is not a common carrier, as respects a common carrier's absolute liability as insurer for the cargo of such party lost in towing.—Cary-Davis Towing Co. v. Spradley, 196 P. 655, 115 Wash. 93.

benefit be voluntarily received;[21] and it has been stated that it is only where a party may accept or reject without serious inconvenience that an estoppel arises from the acceptance of benefits.[22] Furthermore no estoppel arises where the person accepting the benefits is entitled to them regardless of the transaction in question.[23]

The rule must be given a reasonable interpretation,[24] and must be applied in a manner to do equity.[25] In no event can the estoppel be extended beyond the exact terms of the agreement or proceedings under which the benefits are accepted.[26]

a. Contracts

A person may be estopped from questioning the existence, validity, and effect of a contract by accepting or claiming benefits thereunder, provided the contract is not void as against public policy or against an express mandate of law.

As a general rule, by accepting benefits a person may be estopped from questioning the existence, validity, and effect of a contract.[27] A party will not be allowed to assume the inconsistent position of affirming a contract in part by accepting or claiming its benefits, and disaffirming it in part by repudiating or avoiding its obligations, or burdens.[28]

This rule has been applied in various circumstances,[29] as where the objection was made that the contract was not signed by all the parties named therein,[30] nor by the party claiming the estoppel;[31] that it was agreed that the contract should not be binding unless reduced to writing;[32] that the contract was void as in violation of the statute of frauds;[33] that the party claiming the estoppel did not read the contract before signing it;[34] that the contract was not delivered;[35] that the contract was without consideration;[36] that the contract was invalid for want of mutuality,[37] or as containing a potestative condition,[38] or because of the minority of one of the parties;[39] that a contract made with a husband was invalid by reason of the absence of the wife's statutory assent to the contract;[40] that chattels accepted and retained without objection were not up to contract requirements;[41] or that the appraisement provided for by a contract for the sale of improvements was incorrect.[42] In addition, where a person accepts the benefits of a new contract he cannot maintain that the former one is in force.[43]

On the other hand, the rule has no application where the party against whom the estoppel is claimed acts in ignorance of his rights,[44] where the contract expressly provides that nothing in it shall alter, affect, or impair the interest of any of the parties to it,[45] or where the person claiming the estoppel has sustained no injury.[46] Where work done under an unauthorized contract is wholly worthless, it is not a benefit which will estop a party from repudiating the contract.[47] Where items for extra work were not the subject of discussion or contention in the settlement of the amount due on a contract, the payment of the contract price does not operate as an estoppel.[48]

A person does not waive his right to sue for deceit inducing him to enter into a contract by accepting the benefits of the contract.[49]

Contracts against law or public policy. An important exception to the rule usually recognized is that, where the contract is void as against public policy or against an express mandate of the law, a person who has accepted a benefit thereunder will not be estopped to defend against the contract when it is sought to be enforced against him.[50] However, there is some authority to the contrary.[51]

Equitable estoppel or estoppel by deed
Estoppel of the grantee of a deed is of the nature of equitable estoppel rather than technical estoppel by deed, since the estoppel is not predicated primarily on execution of a formal written instrument which cannot be denied or rebutted but rather on the inability of a person, in the eyes of the law, to acquiesce in, and enjoy the benefits of, a transaction and at the same time reject the accompanying burdens.—In re Solomon, D.C.Pa., 40 F.Supp. 62

Abandonment of benefits
One taking mortgage or interest in property subject to specific lien may be estopped while he retains benefit from disavowing attendant burden, but basis for estoppel is cut away if transaction is lawfully disaffirmed and security abandoned.—Buffum v. do both, and, having adopted one course, he cannot afterward pursue the other.[55]

However, to put this rule into operation it is essential that the party accepting the benefits should have knowledge of the facts authorizing him to impeach the instrument,[56] and that the party claiming the estoppel should have been ignorant of the facts out of which the alleged estoppel arose.[57] No estoppel arises against one where the acts claimed to create an estoppel were superinduced by fraud of the party setting up the estoppel.[58]

Wills. Parties who claim under a will cannot be heard to dispute its validity[59] or to assert an interest in hostility to the will.[60]

c. Bonds

(1) In general

(2) Appeal and supersedeas bonds

(1) In General

Where a bond has accomplished its purpose, or the principal has derived benefit from it, the principal and sureties are estopped to deny liability thereon.

It is a rule of general application that, where a bond has accomplished the purpose for which it was given, or the principal has derived benefit from it, both the principal and sureties are estopped to deny liability on the bond on any ground whatever.[61] This rule has been applied to various classes of bonds.[62]

Likewise objections such as the following, it has been held, are not available: That a bail bond failed to describe the crime for which defendant was arrested;[63] that the penalty of the bond was less in amount than required by statute;[64] that the act of a company which executed a bond as surety was ultra vires;[65] that the body to whom the bond was given was without corporate capacity;[66] that a bond given to procure the release of garnished funds is invalid on the ground that no statute authorizes such release;[67] or that a bond conditioned to pay any judgment that might be rendered on a new trial, the giving of which was the condition on which the new trial was granted, was invalid because the court had no right to grant the new trial.[68]

(2) Appeal and Supersedeas Bonds

By voluntarily executing an appeal or supersedeas bond the appellant and his sureties may be estopped to question the sufficiency or validity of the bond and other matters; and the acts or conduct of the obligee may estop him from instituting an action against the sureties.

Payment by surety

Where, after a surety on the bond of a contractor, who was constructing municipal water and sewer system, had made payment to municipality in compromise of its action for nonfulfillment of the contract, the contractor recovered judgment against the city in the federal court, which judgment was rendered pursuant to a settlement specifically including any claim against the city on account of the surety's payment, it was held that the contractor, having received benefit of the payment by having his judgment increased to include the payment, was estopped from denying the surety's authority to make the same.—Peay v. Southern Surety Co., 216 S.W. 722, 141 Ark. 265.

By executing an appeal or supersedeas bond, and thereby in fact obtaining the contemplated benefits pending the disposition of the appeal, the parties may estop themselves from asserting certain defenses to liability on the bond.[69] The general principle is that the obligors are estopped to deny their liability in accordance with the conditions of the bond, where the bond has subserved the purpose for which it was given and appellant has had the benefit of it.[70] Where appellant has obtained the benefit of an appeal, he and his sureties are estopped to question the sufficiency or validity of the appeal or supersedeas bond[71] unless it contravenes some statute or rule of public policy.[72] Thus the obligors may be estopped, by receipt of benefits, to question the sufficiency of the justification[73] approval,[74] or filing[75] of the bond. Likewise, by voluntarily giving the bond and obtaining the benefits thereof, appellant and his sureties are estopped from questioning the jurisdiction of the court to which the appeal is taken;[76] and they are estopped from inquiring into the regularity and validity of the appeal proceedings,[77] even where the proceedings are so defective or unauthorized as to require a dismissal of the ap-

Condition in excess of statutory requirement

Where a party, against whom was issued an injunction to restrain the maintenance of a dam and to require its removal, executed an appeal bond conditioned to pay damages and mesne profits pending the appeal in addition to the condition for payment of the judgment and costs required by Burns St.Annot 1914 § 679, and the opposite party relied on the condition for the payment of damages and mesne profits for his protection against loss caused by the maintenance of the dam, the obligors were estopped, after affirmance of the judgment, to attack the condition for payment of damages and mesne profits as surplusage because not required by the statute.—Woodward v Trout, 129 N.E. 251, 75 Ind.App. 208.

Estoppel of bonding company retaining premium

Where a bonding company with knowledge of an informality in the execution of an appeal bond by its agent received and retained the premium, it was estopped in an action on the bond from urging such informality as a defense.—Farmers' & Merchants' Irr. Co. v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. of Baltimore, 108 N.W. 156, 77 Neb. 144.

Bond by intervener with no right to appeal

Where a party gave a supersedeas bond and his appeal was subsequently dismissed because he had no right to intervene or to appeal, it was held that there was no estoppel to raise the defense of want of consideration for such bond, on a motion, in the original suit, to obtain judgment against the sureties pursuant to statute.—Loudon v. (2) Where a supersedeas bond had been executed, filed, and approved by the clerk of the court in which the judgment was rendered after the time allowed by the court in which execution may be stayed pending the filing of the petition in error and case-made in the supreme court, and plaintiff in error thereafter filed his petition in error and case-made in the supreme court and had the benefit accruing by virtue of the execution of such bond by a stay of such execution pending the disposition of his case in the supreme court, neither he nor his sureties may deny liability on such bond because the same was not filed within the time originally allowed by the court for the same to be filed.—Jones v. First Nat. Bank, 171 P. 848, 69 Okl. 199.

(3) Intended supersedeas bond which, under the applicable statute, was ineffective as a supersedeas bond, because not filed within a specified time after judgment had been rendered, was good as a common-law bond, and hence sureties were liable thereon for damages sustained by appellees.—Martin v. Bogard, 2 S.W.2d 700, 176 Ark. 203.

Full purpose for which bond given effected

Where an appellant gained the full purpose for which a supersedeas bond was given, he may not successfully assert that the appeal was unnecessary or might have been dis-

peal for want of jurisdiction.[78] However, the obligors may inquire into the validity of an appeal for the purpose of relieving themselves from liability on their undertaking, where appellant derives no benefit from the invalid appeal.[79]

The validity of the judgment on appeal may not be impeached on the ground of defects in the bond.[80] Further, where the result of an appeal is a trial de novo in the appellate court, and such trial is within the jurisdiction of such court and actually had, the question of the validity of the judgment below cannot be raised in a suit on the appeal bond.[81]

Estoppel of obligee. The acts or conduct of the obligee may be such as to constitute an estoppel to bring an action against the sureties on the bond.[82] It has been held or recognized that an appellee may not assert the validity of an appeal bond for the purpose of maintaining an action on the bond after having procured a dismissal of the appeal on the ground of its insufficiency,[83] although the view has been taken that where an appeal bond is insufficient, and appellant fails to furnish a new bond on order of the court, the dismissal of the appeal on motion of appellee does not preclude him from bringing an action on the bond.[84]

d. Sales

A person who knowingly accepts the proceeds of the sale of his property is estopped to assert title as against the purchaser, and one who participates in the proceeds of a sale of a debtor's assets or of a sale under a decree of court cannot attack the validity of the sale.

One who accepts the proceeds of a sale of his property by another with knowledge that it is the proceeds of a sale of his property is estopped to assert title thereto against the purchaser or those claiming under him.[85] A creditor who makes no objection and who participates in the proceeds of the Agreement of appellee to bid amount of judgment on a sale

(1) Appellee who promised to bid the full amount of the original judgment on a sale to satisfy the same, and was relieved from executing a certain bond, was estopped from bringing an action on supersedeas bond where appellee failed to comply with its promise.—Holland Texas Hypotheek Bank of Amsterdam, Holland v. Broocks, supra.

(2) Appellee's offer to bid sufficient to pay the judgment, which was alleged to work an estoppel against a suit on the appeal bond, was not conditioned on sale on day advertised.—Holland Texas Hypotheek Bank of Amsterdam, Holland v. Broocks, supra.

An opinion as to a legal question given by attorney for obligee, at the trial of the original action, in response to a question of the court, does not constitute an estoppel which may be relied on as a defense in an action on a bond subsequently given on appeal from a judgment in favor of the obligee.—Independent School Dist. No. 35 v. Oliver Mining Co., 208 N.W. 952, 169 Minn. 15, affirmed 210 N.W. 856, 169 Minn. 15.

Indorsement of satisfaction on record

In an action on an appeal bond the surety may not successfully set up an estoppel based on plaintiff's act in indorsing a satisfaction on the record of the judgment appealed from and the surety's return to appellant of securities deposited with the surety to protect it against liability, where the surety before returning such securities had acquired knowledge that the amount of the judgment appealed from had actually been paid.—Beasley v. Stockholder accepting proceeds of corporate assets

Principal stockholder of corporation cannot affirm sale of corporation's assets to other corporation and hold proceeds and at the same time disaffirm sale as illegal, in action by creditor of corporation to recover against him as stockholder fraudulently withholding assets.—Davis v. Hemming, 127 A. 514, 101 Conn. 713, 39 A.L.R. 133.

Waiver of condition by accepting proceeds

sale of a debtor's assets cannot attack the validity of the sale.[86]

Nevertheless, where it is claimed that a person is estopped from suing for the recovery of property by reason of his having received the proceeds of the sale thereof, it should be made to appear, in order to maintain the plea, that such proceeds were received knowingly, since if he received them ignorantly, supposing that they came from some other source, although he may be compelled to refund, there is no estoppel.[87] The acceptance of a sum of money by a person believing it to be paid for a specified number of chattels does not estop him from claiming the price for other chattels illegally taken.[88] To effect an estoppel the benefit must be actually received[89] and must be of more than an insignificant value.[90] By accepting a part of the purchase price on delivery of the deed the vendor is not estopped to sue the purchaser for the remainder.[91]

A purchaser by retaining possession of the property sold is not estopped to recover damages for the vendor's fraudulent representations inducing the purchase of the property.[92]

Sales in judicial proceedings. Ordinarily those who accept a part or all of the proceeds of a sale of property under a judgment decree or order of court are estopped to claim that the sale was invalid.[93] This rule has been applied to sales under decree in suits to enforce liens on land;[94] to sales in proceedings for partition;[95] to sales by executors and administrators;[96] to sales by receivers;[97] and to sales of land under proceedings for that purpose against nonresidents.[98]

chase the contract from the vendee in ignorance of its requirement that the vendor's written consent be obtained, yet said nothing about the provision, and afterward accepted the benefits of payments which the assignee company made, such vendor is prevented either on the ground of waiver or estoppel from subsequently insisting on the condition at least without returning the payments.—Smith v. Martin, 185 P. 236, 94 Or. 132.

Children of deceased fee-simple owner of land and her surviving husband, to whom, as such children's natural guardian, insignificant amounts, allotted by judgment in his partition suit as children's shares of proceeds of partition sale to him, were paid while children were infants, were not estopped by acceptance of such shares to assert invalidity of sale in action, brought by them after attaining majority, to try and determine title to land.—Rhodus v. Estoppel against bondholders of debtor

If receiver's supply creditors urged receiver to sell the property, and accepted seventy per cent of their claims out of the proceeds, they would not be estopped to prosecute suit against bondholders, since bondholders should have seen to it that the property brought a sufficient sum to pay off all claims superior to theirs.—Mayotown Lumber Co. v. Nacogdoches Grocery Co., Tex.Civ.App., 221 S.W. 644, affirmed Com.App., 236 S.W. 704.

98. Ky.—Hackler v. Nicholson, 5 Ky.L. 859.

On the other hand, the rule does not apply to one who acted in ignorance of the facts which rendered the sale invalid,[99] and is limited strictly to property included in the proceedings.[1] It has further been held that where there has been a retender of the proceeds to the personal representative making the sale, which was refused, it cannot be declared as a matter of law that the party making the retender is estopped.[2]

e. Taking Property for Public Use

The acceptance of damages awarded in proceedings under which property is taken for public use will ordinarily estop the owner from questioning the validity of the proceedings or to deny that he had legal title at the time of the proceedings, but he is not estopped to assert claims as to other property.

The acceptance of the damages awarded in proceedings under which property has been taken for a public or quasi public use will ordinarily estop the owner from questioning their validity[3] or to deny that he had the legal title at the time of the proceedings;[4] and he cannot thereafter recover the property taken[5] nor attack the proceedings collaterally.[6]

Nevertheless the owner will not be estopped by acceptance of damages from claiming land not described in the verdict in condemnation proceedings,[7] or from invoking the aid of the courts against an improper exercise of the power of eminent domain by agreement relating only to part of the property sought to be taken.[8] The receipt of damages assessed in proceedings before county commissioners for the opening of a private way will not estop the person receiving the same from resisting the opening of the way over his lands, where the money is accepted under a mistake as to the amount of work that will be done in opening the way by the person for whose benefit it is proposed to be opened.[9]

f. Judgment, Decree, or Judicial Order

One who accepts the benefits of a judgment, decree, or judicial order is estopped to deny the validity thereof.

A person who accepts the benefits of a judgment, decree, or judicial order is estopped to deny the validity thereof,[10] whether the invalidity results from want of jurisdiction of the person[11] or of the subject matter of the suit.[12]

The violation of an order or judgment does not, it has been held, estop a party from insisting on the benefits thereunder.[13]

g. Other Applications

The general rule that a person may be estopped by the acceptance of benefits has been applied in various other cases.

The general rule stated in § 109 supra, that a person by accepting the benefits of a transaction is bound by its obligations, has been applied in various other cases.[14] Thus by accepting the benefits

a person may be estopped to deny liability or to repudiate the burdens incident to a land survey,[15] lease,[16] note,[17] check,[18] receipt of money,[19] or provisions in a corporation charter.[20] Likewise the rule may be invoked to prevent the denial, repudiation, or questioning of divisions of property,[21] status of an adopted child,[22] or a status of legitimacy.[23]

A person who accepts an amount as full payment of a claim is estopped to assert a further claim arising out of the same transaction,[24] unless the facts are misrepresented by the party claiming the estoppel.[25] A further claim is not precluded by the acceptance of a payment of money due if it is not agreed or understood by both parties that the payment is in full settlement,[26] or if under an express agreement the payment is accepted on condition that it shall not prejudice the accepter's rights,[27] unless the agreement is unauthorized.[28] Acceptance of delinquent payments under a contract may estop the recipient from insisting on a forfeiture of the contract for nonpayment,[29] but the mere acceptance of delayed payments on a note is not an estoppel to insist on an accelerated maturity clause in the note.[30]

b. Irregular exercise of power
c. Governmental or proprietary functions

a. In General

Receipt of benefits ordinarily will not estop a municipal corporation to deny the validity of a contract clearly beyond its powers.

Under the general rules set forth infra § 143, and subject to considerations discussed infra this section, it may be broadly stated that ordinarily a municipal corporation is not estopped to deny the want of power to make a contract by receiving the benefits thereof;[31] and it has been held that full performance by the contractor of a contract with a city which is void because opposed to the constitution and laws and contrary to public policy will not prevent the city from pleading its want of power or the illegality of the contract.[32] If the thing done is illegal or not warranted by law, however beneficial it may be, the public is not estopped to deny its validity.[33]

However, there are decisions to the effect that a municipality may be estopped by receipt of benefits to deny the validity of a contract which is beyond its corporate power,[34] unless it restores the benefits received,[35] if it is possible to do so;[36] and this view has been recognized in other decisions with the limitation that the contract must not be malum in se or attended with criminal liability,[37] or that it must not be expressly prohibited by its charter or any law, and that there shall be no bad faith,[38] and this rule has been said to be particularly applicable where the contract has become an executed one.[39] The doctrine of ultra vires, it has been stated, when invoked for or against a corporation, should not be allowed to prevail where it would defeat the ends of justice or work a legal wrong.[40]

If no contract was in fact made by a municipality, either by previous authorization or subsequent ratification, the municipality is not liable on the theory of estoppel resulting from benefits received by it.[41]

Employment contracts invalid under wage and budget laws

Where minimum wage law fixed the rate at which an amount paid by city of Phœnix to employees who performed mechanical or manual labor on public works was to be credited, when gross amount budgeted for such purposes, applied at that rate, was exhausted, all contracts of employment for such purposes were automatically terminated and new contracts could not be made by either city or employees, separately or together, under doctrine of waiver or estoppel so as to create liability on part of the city for services performed thereafter. Provisions of budget law may be waived only by legislature, and hence a city could not be held liable on moral obligation to pay wages claimed by employees who performed mechanical and manual labor on public works where amount claimed was in excess of amount budgeted by city for class of labor in question.—City of Phœnix v. Kidd, 92 P.2d 513, 54 Ariz. 75, affirmed 94 P.2d 428, 54 Ariz. 123, followed in City of Phœnix v. Price, 94 P.2d 433, 54 Ariz. 137, affirming 92 P.2d 523, 54 Ariz. 98, followed in City of Phœnix v. Contract contrary to express statutory regulation

Where an architect prepared plans for directors of poor on an unauthorized contract, although poor district accepted benefits of work done, it is not estopped from refusing to pay for his services, as the principle of estoppel does not permit expenditure of public funds contrary to express statutory enactment.—Willis v. b. Irregular Exercise of Power

Receipt of benefits may estop a municipality from denying the validity of an act or contract which is within its power, but which is invalid because of an informal or irregular exercise of its power.

Under the general rules discussed infra § 144, where the act or contract of a municipal or quasi-municipal corporation is not one which it is without corporate power to make but is unenforceable merely because of an irregular exercise of power in the making or execution of it, the corporation may be estopped to deny the validity of the act or contract where it has accepted the benefits thereof.[42] This doctrine will not be applied, however, to validate a contract where a city council purports to do what it has no power to do by any procedure,[43] and it has been held to be inapplicable where the contract was made in a manner directly contravening mandatory provisions of a statute;[44] nor may such rule be applied to a case where no benefit of a public character was received.[45] Some benefit real and substantial must have been accepted,[46] and if no more has been paid to a municipal or quasi-municipal corporation for free use of city for public meetings, does not estop city from resisting execution or continuance of contract, not within its powers, to furnish water to church free of charge for use in swimming pool, in absence of allegation that auditorium was furnished as part of consideration of contract, or with full knowledge of city commissioners—City of Fort Worth v. Retaining proceeds from sale of school lands

Where a school district had power to sell land, but the sale was invalid because of irregularities, the district will be estopped thereafter so to claim if it authorized the sale, received the proceeds, turned it into the school treasury, and used it for school purposes, all of which was done by permission of the commissioners' court, and especially is this true where ten or twelve years have passed during which all parties recognized the validity of the sale.—Mecom v. Fraud or negligence without public benefit
The negligence or fraudulent conduct of agent of municipal corporation, such as county, in connection with issuance of warrants thereby, will not bind corporation to any liability by way of "estoppel" or otherwise, if it receives no benefit from transaction.—De Witt v. than it would have been entitled to in the absence of the contract, it has been held that such corporation is not estopped to deny its validity.[47] Moreover, as is stated infra § 138, all of the essential elements of an estoppel must have been present.

A grant or license to use a street may estop the city where the city has acquiesced in the improvements made and received benefits therefrom.[48] After proceeds of a bond issue have been received by a school district, it is estopped from asserting a defect in the proceedings leading up to their issuance.[49]

c. Governmental or Proprietary Functions

By the receipt of benefits, a municipality acting in its proprietary capacity may be estopped to deny the validity of irregular or informal action, but it is not estopped to deny the validity of action wholly beyond its power.

Where a municipality is acting in its proprietary, as distinguished from its governmental, capacity, by receipt of benefits it may be estopped from denying the validity of a contract irregularly made by it,[50] although under such circumstances it will not be estopped from denying the validity of a contract wholly beyond its powers.[51]

Irrespective of whether it was exercising a governmental or a proprietary function, a municipality will not be estopped to deny liability because of receipt of benefits where, in fact, it received no benefits.[52]

§ 112. Parties Dealing with Municipal Corporations

One dealing with a municipal corporation may, by receipt of benefits under a contract, be estopped to deny the regularity of the organization of the corporation or to assert that the contract was irregularly executed, although the authorities differ respecting the estoppel of one receiving the benefit of the contract to deny the power of the municipality to make it.

One who has contracted with a municipal corporation in regard to a subject matter within the scope of its powers, and who has received the benefit of the contract, is estopped to deny the regularity and completeness of the organization of the corporation,[53] or to assert that the contract was not executed by the corporation as required by law.[54] It has also been held that one who has had the benefit of a contract with a municipality is estopped to deny the power of the municipality to make the contract;[55] and this rule has been applied where the contract, although ultra vires the corporation, was not illegal because not prohibited by the charter.[56] Furthermore, the rule has been extended to deny the right of the party receiving the benefits of the contract to assert that the contract was void as against public policy.[57] Where a contractor receives full compensation before he is entitled thereto, he, or one claiming under him, is estopped to assert that the contract, although within the power of the city, is not within the power of the particular officers or agents who acted on behalf of the city.[58] One accepting the emoluments of office may be estopped to deny the legality of its creation.[59]

Director of public health
One appointed director of public health and sanitation of San Diego County, although appointed before ordinance creating office was passed, having performed duties of his office and accepted emoluments from it, was a de facto director and was estopped from denying either legality of creation of his office or of his appointment thereto by urging that term of office and manner of appointment were not set forth in charter in accordance with constitutional provision.—Lesem v. Getty, supra.

On the other hand, there are decisions which hold without qualification that neither one who has received the benefits of a contract with a municipal corporation nor those claiming under him, are estopped to set up the want of the corporate authority to make such a contract.[60]

Estoppel to deny validity of ordinance. After a public service corporation has accepted an ordinance imposing limitations of its rates of charge, it is estopped to deny the validity of the ordinance on the ground that the rates fixed are not reasonable.[61]

Estoppel to deny validity of grant or license. The beneficiary of a grant or license who has acquiesced therein and received valuable property under it cannot deny its validity as against the municipal authorities or others.[62]

§ 113. Acquiescence

Acquiescence may be the basis of an equitable estoppel.

Acquiescence as a defense has, generally speaking, a dual nature; it may, on the one hand, rest on the principle of ratification and be denominated "implied ratification," or, on the other hand, rest on the principle of estoppel and be denominated "equitable estoppel."[63]

While acquiescence is akin to laches, both being a species of estoppel,[64] the two doctrines are by no means the same, a much more definite apparent assent to the acts complained of being required in acquiescence than in laches.[65] Acquiescence has also been regarded as a species of waiver.[66]

§ 114. In Acts of Others

a. In general
b. Particular applications of rule

a. In General

A person who, with knowledge of the facts and of his rights, acquiesces in or ratifies an act or transaction is estopped to repudiate such act or transaction as against one who is misled to his prejudice; but an estoppel cannot be extended beyond the natural and reasonable import of the acts or conduct relied on.

As a general rule, where a person with actual or constructive knowledge of the facts induces another by his words or conduct to believe that he acquiesces in or ratifies a transaction, or that he will offer no opposition thereto, and that other, in reliance on such belief, alters his position, such person is estopped from repudiating the transaction to the other's prejudice.[67] This rule obtains regardless

Acquiescence as ratification, adoption, or affirmance
"Some courts use the words 'ratification,' 'acquiescence,' 'adoption,' and 'affirmance' in practically the same sense and hold that an estoppel may be based upon any of these matters and in some instances on a waiver. Others hold that there can be no ratification except in the case of an agency of some nature, and an estoppel by acquiescence is sometimes referred to as a quasi estoppel, that is, as one in which a situation is created which is analogous to estoppel and has the same effect as an estoppel in pais."—Mahoning Inv. of the particular intent of the party whose acquiescence induces action.[68]

Elements, extent, and limits of rule. In addition, it is essential that the party claiming the estoppel should be misled by the acquiescence of the party against whom the estoppel is claimed,[76] and that he should be entitled to rely thereon.[77] Further, it is usually necessary that he should be induced to change his position by reason thereof,[78] and that the acts of acquiescence be such as to prejudice him;[79] but it has been held that in some instances an estoppel may be invoked although no change of position has actually occurred.[80]

Continuance of course pursued

"Where acquiescence is the ground of the estoppel there is usually no occasion for a change of the position of the party claiming the estoppel and no change is made. All that is shown in these cases is that the acts of the party estopped were such as to mislead the party claiming the estoppel to continue in the course already begun, believing the same to be acceptable to the party estopped."—Mahoning Inv. Co. v. U.S., supra.

It has been held in a number of decisions that mere nonaction or passivity will not create an estoppel in the absence of some other element requiring its invocation;[81] it must appear that the party to be estopped was bound in equity and good conscience actively to evidence his intention not to be bound by the transaction.[82] No estoppel arises by acquiescence in acts other than or different from the acts which the party claiming the estoppel alleges that he is entitled to commit by reason of the estoppel.[83] Further, no estoppel arises where the acquiescence by all concerned is due to a common mistake,[84] where the party claiming it knows that his acts are not lawful and are merely permissive,[85] or where the facts fail to show acquiescence clearly and unambiguously.[86] There can be no assent to acts which one is powerless to prevent.[87] In no event can the estoppel be extended beyond the natural and reasonable import of the acts or conduct relied on to create the estoppel.[88]

b. Particular Applications of Rule

The rule estopping a party to repudiate a transaction in which he has acquiesced has been applied in various circumstances, such as in controversies arising out of contracts, sales, bills and notes, etc.

The rule, stated in subdivision a of this section, estopping a party from repudiating a transaction in which he has acquiesced has been applied in various circumstances.[89] The rule has been invoked and applied in controversies arising out of contracts generally;[90] in controversies or contentions arismitting, at indorser's request, corporation principal to remove assets from state.—A. H. Scoggin & Co. v. City Nat. Bank, 299 S.W. 1033, 175 Ark. 461.

(2) Railroad was held not estopped from claiming legal rates on shipment of government property by having previously accepted reduced rates.—U. S. v. New York, C. & St. L. R. Co., C.C.A.Ohio, 32 F.2d 887.

(3) Those seeking to prevent sale by county of land acquired by county for a dock site were not estopped from contesting the attempted sale, because they made no objection to the conveyance by the county of a certain portion of the property to another.—Commercial Waterway Dist. No. 1 of King County v. King County, 94 P.2d 491, 200 Wash. 538.

89. Circumstances creating estoppel

(1) Parties seeking, for unreasonable delay, forfeiture of timber granted under deed prescribing no time for removal may be estopped by acquiescence in or encouragement of delay.—Stump v. Moore, 140 S.E. 480, 104 W.Va. 513.

(2) Knowledge and acquiescence by record owner that son was including land in financial statements as basis of credit would estop owner from reclaiming land.—Cooke v. Fenner & Beane, 108 So. 370, 214 Ala. 558.

(3) Purchaser of land encumbered by deed of trust, consenting to change of trustees, was estopped to contend that majority of bondholders did not consent to transfer.—Central State Bank v. Benson, 229 N.W. 691, 209 Iowa 1176.

Facts constituting estoppel

(1) Vendor who participates in, agrees to, and acquiesces in, the assignment of a contract by the purchaser to a third party, is estopped to assert its nonassignability.—Young v. Adams, 84 So. 1, 122 Miss 1.

(2) Land contract vendors' acquiescence for more than a year in surrender of contract rights by vendees' assignees during which period property damage and loss resulted from vendors' inaction, was held to estop vendors from recovering from assignees balance due on contract.—Denler & Denler Land Co. v. Eby, 269 N.W. 203, 277 Mich. 360.

(3) Seller having voluntarily accepted lawful conditions of contract with state, cannot assert state's lack of power to contract.—American Book Co. v. State, 113 So. 592, 216 Ala. 367.

(4) A husband who had contracted to pay wife one half of proceeds of sale of his property was estopped from contending, in suit instituted several years later to recover money received by wife, that contract and conveyance of property were void.—Godfrey v. Godfrey, 86 P.2d 357, 30 Cal.App.2d 370.

Estoppel not shown

(1) Where a building contract provided that no change should be made without the owner's consent in writing, the owner was not estopped from relying on such contract, where he did not know of changes until the work was completed, notwithstanding he then made no particular protest.—Pence v. Dennie, 182 P. 980, 41 Cal. App. 428.

(2) The acceptance of void tax anticipation warrants as payment for goods did not estop the seller from maintaining suit on its account.—Standard Oil Co. v. Town of Patterson, 21 N.E.2d 12, 300 Ill.App. 385.

(3) Where contractor accedes to demand of other contracting party to perform work, or furnish material which under contractor's construction of the contract, made known to the other party, constitutes a modification, but which other party insists is a compliance with terms of contract, the contractor is not estopped

ing out of sales;[91] bills and notes;[92] bonds;[93] leases;[94] accounts and settlements;[95] partition of property;[96] management and distribution of estates[97] or trust funds;[98] and the use and dedication of highways, streets, and parks.[99]

The rule has also been applied with reference to the use and appropriation of water rights;[1] participation in elections and proceedings subsequent thereto;[2] the delivery of an instrument held in es-from insisting on his construction of the contract and recovering for work and material thus furnished.

§ 115. In Judicial Proceedings

A person who, with knowledge of the facts and of his rights, assents to, or participates in, judicial proceedings without objection is ordinarily bound by such proceedings as against one who has been misled to his injury.

Where a party with knowledge of the facts assents to, or participates in, judicial proceedings without objection, he is generally bound by such proceedings as against one who has been misled to his injury by such conduct,[7] especially where the party against whom the estoppel is claimed has accepted benefits or enjoyed rights under the judgment, decree or order rendered therein.[8]

However, the general rule applies only to those persons who are under some duty to act,[9] and who act with knowledge of their rights[10] and of the facts claimed to create an estoppel.[11] In addition, it is essential that the party claiming the estoppel be misled by the conduct of the party against whom the doctrine is invoked,[12] and that in consequence of such conduct he changed his position[13] to his prejudice.[14]

A party is not bound by a proceeding where his conduct does not constitute an assent to, or a par-

Acts not creating estoppel

(1) Estoppel by laches in instituting suit to avoid judicial sale after lapse of some years was held not shown.—Hirsch v. Northwestern Mut. Life Ins. Co., 13 S.E.2d 165, 191 Ga. 524.

(2) Mortgage sale purchaser was not estopped from excepting to the sale by reason of the deposit made with auctioneer when the property was knocked down.—Byrd v. Day, 114 A. 486, 138 Md. 442.

(3) That meeting wherein bondholders decided to remove trust deed trustee was held more than six months after trustee started proceeding for foreclosure and receiver did not estop bondholders to dispute trustee's right in proceeding for receiver, where proceeding was never served.—City Bank & Trust Co. v. Graf, 165 S.E. 238, 175 Ga. 340.

Compromise of suit

(1) Participation in a compromise settlement of a suit, or acquiescence therein, estops a party from attacking or repudiating such settlement after other persons have relied thereon.

ticipation in, the proceeding.[15] Acquiescence may not be inferred from the failure to perform an act which is not within the power of the party alleged to be estopped.[16] Thus the failure to make a defense in a proceeding in which it is not available will not estop the party from making it in a subsequent proceeding in which it is available.[17]

Acquiescence in a judicial proceeding does not estop a party as to matters not involved in such proceeding.[18]

Partition proceedings. Ordinarily a party who participates and acquiesces in proceedings for partition will be estopped subsequently to deny the regularity or validity thereof,[19] except, it has been held, where the partition proceedings were wholly void,[20] or where the participation relied on was superinduced by the fraud of the party claiming the estoppel.[21] An exception to the rule is also allowed in favor of minors and other persons who are incompetent to act.[22]

By participating in partition proceedings a party is not estopped as to matters which were not involved in, or affected by, such proceedings.[23]

§ 116. Inconsistency in Positions before and after Commencement of Litigation

With some qualifications, the general rule is that, where a party gives a reason for his decision and conduct touching anything involved in a controversy, he is estopped after litigation has been begun from changing his ground and putting his conduct on a different consideration.

Retention of land
A person is estopped to repudiate the partition proceedings where he has received and retained a part of the land largely in excess of what he was entitled to, and where the balance of the land has passed into the hands of other parties and the ultimate loss would fall on the other parties to the partition proceedings.—Greer v. Acts not creating estoppel
Heirs knowing of other heirs' pending actions to set aside their deed to mother and make partition of lands, but not objecting to grantors' claims before bringing partition suit, were held not guilty of laches estopping them from maintaining suit where they were not parties and had no rights involved in the other suit.—Skeen v. authorities, there would otherwise be a misleading of the adversary to his prejudice or an advantage to the party against whom the doctrine is invoked.[25] However, a party is not estopped from asserting an additional ground which he has not previously asserted where it does not appear that he acted dishonestly or prejudicially misled his adversary,[26] or where he was previously ignorant of the additional ground.[27] An erroneous conclusion of law by the party complained against does not estop him from subsequently asserting his rights under the correct rules of law.[28]

The rule does not require detailed explanations of the grounds of defense.[29] It has been held that the rule does not estop a plaintiff who is defeated on one of several independent causes of action from prosecuting the others,[30] or a person who has a choice of remedies for a wrong.[31]

Prior position untenable

Where the purchasers of land under a contract with an infant refused to carry out the alleged agreement before a guardian was appointed for the infant and authorized to perform the agreement, the fact that the refusal was based on the untenable ground that the contract had been procured by fraud does not affect the legal result of their action.—Freeman v. Fishman, 139 N.E. 846, 245 Mass. 222.

Different demands

Where defendant tenants, in face of one demand by their lessor, took a certain position, they are not estopped from changing such position in subsequent litigation by the lessor against them to enforce a different demand.—Mecklenburg Real Estate Co. v. Kyoleum Co., 218 S.W. 821, 142 Tenn. 295.

Different aspects of same ground

Common carrier's denial of right of railroad to which fuel oil was consigned to share in revenues as participating carrier pursuant to switching tariff, on ground that such sharing would have been a rebate, did not estop common carrier in subsequent suit to recover revenues which had been subsequently shared under a mistaken belief, from asserting insufficiency of billing, both grounds urged being in accord with the rule of law that the intention of the consignee as to the point at which the common carrier movement is to end must be clearly shown.—Northern Pac. "The rule that a party, having given a reason for his conduct about a matter in controversy, is estopped, after litigation is begun, from changing his ground . . . is not a rule of universal application . . . [but] is of doubtful application in any case, unless the former position is inconsistent with the position adopted after litigation, or unless the adverse party has been misled or is prejudiced by the change of attitude."—Mecklenburg Real Estate Co. v. Kyoleum Co., 218 S.W. 821, 823, 142 Tenn. 295.

Intent to mislead

Corporation, which refused to make transfer of corporate stock because it questioned pledgor's mental capacity to make it, was held, in absence of fraud or intent to mislead, not estopped, in action by pledgee for conversion and wrongful detention of such stock, to set up defense that blanks in indorsements on certificates surrendered for transfer were not filled.—Palmer v. O'Bannon Corporation, 149 N.E. 112, 253 Mass. 8.

Change of position

Even if a letter from the seller, assigning as the reason for his refusal to deliver a second carload of flour the buyer's failure to pay for the first carload delivered, could be the basis of an estoppel preventing the seller from relying on breach of the contract for the second carload, it does not operate as such estoppel, where the buyer had taken no action, and changed no position, in reliance thereon.—Muslow v. § 117. Prior Claim or Position in Judicial Proceedings

Subject to certain qualifications and limitations, it is a well established principle that a party who has knowingly and deliberately assumed a particular position in judicial proceedings is estopped to assume a position inconsistent therewith to the prejudice of the adverse party. It is frequently required, in order for such estoppel to operate, that the position first assumed should have been successfully maintained.

Subject to modifications and limitations which will appear, it is a well established principle that a party who has knowingly and deliberately assumed a particular position in judicial proceedings is estopped to assume a position inconsistent therewith to the prejudice of the adverse party.[32] Estoppel on this ground cannot be invoked, however, where the position first assumed was taken as a result of ignorance[33] or mistake,[34] or through the act or fault of the party claiming the estoppel;[35] and, clearly, it cannot be invoked where the position complained of is not inconsistent with a former position.[36] Ordinarily, a change of position with re-

Decrease of claim

"The doctrine of estoppel does not stand in the way of plaintiff's claiming less of the same thing than at the previous trial."—Whitman v. Lowe, 126 A. 513, 517, 98 Vt. 152.

That complainant secured attachment in prohibition proceeding did not estop him from proceeding on theory that action for rescission was for equitable relief.—Fair View Farms Co. v. Superior Court of California in and for Los Angeles County, 10 P.2d 1011, 123 Cal.App. 9.

Motion to correct judgment

Plaintiffs who, having obtained judgment, moved to correct judgment allegedly preventing defendants from perfecting appeal were not thereby judicially estopped to contend that original judgment was final, and enforceable by execution.—Baria v. Taylor, Tex.Civ.App., 57 S.W.2d 858.

Failure to consolidate suits

Failure of defendant to bring about consolidation of trespass actions did not estop defendant from pleading res judicata as to second suit.—Reid v. Singer Sewing Mach. Co., 119 So. 229, 218 Ala. 498.

Levy of execution

The mere fact that plaintiff in fieri facias pointed out an automobile to the sheriff to be levied on under his fieri facias as the property of the defendant in fieri facias did not "estop" plaintiff from denying the title of defendant in another and subsequent proceeding to set the automobile aside as a homestead exemption, since the levy of execution is not of itself a warranty that defendant in fieri facias has any valid title, and it is not even an assertion concerning the nature or validity of the title of the property to be sold thereunder.—Garmon v. Davis, 12 S.E. 2d 209, 63 Ga.App. 815.

40. Party held not estopped

(1) Nonsuit in action on parol contract to repurchase land was not estoppel in pais against enforcement of contract by defendant to convey part of land to plaintiff's wife.—Martin v. Yonce, 137 S.E. 17, 163 Ga. 694.

(2) Where plaintiff, who was decedent's partner in farming operations, filed claim for wages as an employee, but defendants rejected claim, there was no estoppel.—Hull v. Padgett, 223 N.W. 154, 207 Iowa 430.

(3) Defendant was not estopped to claim board of supervisors had jurisdiction in highway proceedings, where it had predicated motion to dismiss plaintiff's former appeal from order of board on plaintiff's attitude that board had no jurisdiction.—Witham v. Union County, 210 N.W. 535, 202 Iowa 557.

(4) One suing to oust, and have himself decreed, parish school superintendent, was not estopped to de-

yond the natural and reasonable import of the acts or conduct relied on to create the estoppel.[41]

Equitable elements generally. Estoppel against inconsistency in judicial proceedings is generally treated as a phase of equitable estoppel or estoppel in pais, and under this view its operation has been made to depend on the presence or absence of elements essential to equitable estoppel.[42] Thus, as a general rule it is essential, or at least an important factor, that the position first assumed should have resulted in advantage to one party or disadvantage to the other.[43] The party invoking the estoppel must have been misled by the assumption of the first position,[44] must have relied on it,[45] and, so relying, have acted, or refrained from acting, or have changed his position, to his prejudice,[46] or have put mand that defendant sign contract employing plaintiff as high school principal.—State ex rel. Floyd v. Hodges, 115 So. 747, 165 La. 552.

(5) That one holding life tenant's interest had in former suit asserted ownership of property did not prevent him from claiming as tenant at sufferance after life tenant's death.—Felt v Methodist Educational Advance, 232 N.W. 178, 251 Mich. 512.

(6) Wife's act, as executrix of deceased husband's estate, in inventorying property in dispute as part of estate, did not estop her from claiming resulting trust in property—Roberts v. Roberts, Mo., 291 S.W. 485.

(7) In action on automobile policy, it was held that court would not be justified in refusing to consider case on entire record because plaintiff's counsel had previously taken view of determining questions inconsistent with views subsequently urged.—B. & B. Trucking v. Home Fire & Marine Ins. Co. of California, 209 N.Y.S. 511, 125 Misc. 312, affirmed 214 N.Y.S. 812, 216 App Div. 710.

(8) That parties denied jurisdiction of Michigan court to appoint administrator for legatee, claiming her domicile was in Pennsylvania, did not prevent their subsequently denying that she was ever domiciled in Pennsylvania.—Denny v. Searles, 143 S.E. 484, 150 Va. 701.

himself in such a position that his rights would be injuriously affected if his opponent were permitted to change his position.[47] There can be no estoppel based on such misleading and reliance where the party invoking it had knowledge equal or superior to that possessed by his adversary, and sufficient to protect him against being misled or relying,[48] or where he had a sufficient opportunity to acquire such knowledge.[49]

Successful maintenance of first position. It is frequently held that estoppel against inconsistent positions in judicial proceedings will operate where the position first assumed has been successfully maintained.[50] A number of cases have expressly

"Where a party assumes a certain position in a legal proceeding, and succeeds in maintaining that position, he may not thereafter, simply because his interests have changed, assume a contrary position, especial-held that successful maintenance is indispensable.[51] This rule, however, does not require that a favorable decree or judgment should have been rendered,[52] and, while the rule is perhaps more clearly satisfied where a judgment or decree is entered or a cause of action established or defeated in accordance with the position first assumed,[53] it is satisfied also if the first position was acquiesced in or acted on by the adverse party to his detriment,[54] or was the basis of some action by the court, ei-ly if it be to the prejudice of the party who has acquiesced in the position formerly taken by him."

Filing plea or defense

Where a party to a proceeding, with right or duty to file a plea or defense or else be foreclosed as to ther in opposition to the adversary's claim or with his acquiescence.[55]

It follows that there may be an estoppel where there has been no judicial determination of the merits of the initial position.[56] Thus, before any determination has been reached as to the position first taken, and while still relying thereon, a party cannot also rely on an inconsistent position; thus he cannot at the same time rely on the existence and nonexistence of a particular fact, the truth and falsity of a given proposition, or the validity and invalidity of an instrument or transaction.[57] Of course, where the proceeding in which the original position was taken has terminated without any decision on the merits, a party is not estopped, in the absence of other equitable circumstances, from assuming an inconsistent position.[58] his rights under it, is induced to withdraw it if filed, or to desist from filing it if ready and intending to do so in proper time, on representation of opposite party that he need not do so and that his right would be otherwise protected, and thus acts to his injury, equity will consider opposite party "estopped" from taking advantage of consequences of his failure so to plead.—Lunsford v. Kersey, 13 S.E.2d 803, 191 Ga. 738.

Judgment not on merits

Where guardian ad litem, in motion to quash summons and service of summons, expressly stated that he did not thereby intend to plead to the merits, and the trial court, taking the guardian ad litem at his word, treated the motion as a motion to quash service not constituting a plea to the merits, the guardian ad litem was thereby "estopped" from claiming that the judgment rendered on that motion was a judgment on the merits.—Hershner v. 21 C.J. p 1230 note 71 [a]–[f].

Whatever the precise limits of the rule as to successful maintenance of the first position may be, there is little question but that, in the absence of other sufficient elements of estoppel, the assumption of inconsistent positions will work no estoppel where the original position was defeated or held untenable or unsound.[59]

Judicial estoppel. The application of the doctrine of equitable estoppel to the assumption of inconsistent positions in judicial proceedings should be distinguished from another doctrine often applied to such inconsistent positions, and known as the doctrine of "judicial" estoppel.[60] This doctrine, it has been said, is not strictly one of estoppel, but partakes rather of positive rules of procedure based on manifest justice and, to a greater or less degree, on considerations of the orderliness, regularity, and expedition of litigation.[61] The elements of reliance and injury which are essential to the operation of equitable estoppel do not enter into judicial estoppel,[62] at least not to the same extent;[63] and while some authorities in applying the doctrine of judicial estoppel have taken cognizance of the presence or absence of such elements,[64] this has been said to be the result of confusing the two doctrines.[65] However, in order to work a judicial estoppel, the position first assumed must have been taken knowingly and free of inducement by the opposite party.[66] Although, as appears in §§ 121 and 122, infra, the doctrine of judicial estoppel applies with particular force to admissions or statements made under sanction of oath, it has been held not restricted to such statements, but applicable to inconsistent positions otherwise taken.[67]

New probate proceeding where earlier procedure held improper.—In re Browning's Will, 294 N.Y.S. 530, 162 Misc. 244.

Action discontinued

Where a bank sued on notes executed to it for money loaned by its president individually, and the president in good faith joined in the suit and verified the petition in which it was claimed that the bank was the owner or holder of notes, such claim being based on the erroneous assumption that the bank would ratify the president's act in making the loan, and thereafter the bank's action was discontinued and the notes assigned to the president, the president was not estopped in his action on the notes from asserting his ownership thereof.—Maddox v. Robbert, 104 So. 183, 158 La. 394

Voluntary or nonprejudicial dismissal

Where the suit is dismissed voluntarily or without prejudice, the fact that a particular position was taken therein does not of itself estop the assumption of an inconsistent position in a subsequent proceeding.

Judicial estoppel not established

Judicial estoppel is based on the principle that a party cannot take advantage of two inconsistent positions in judicial proceedings, and it

§ 118. In Same Proceeding

Generally, a party is estopped to assume inconsistent positions in the course of the same judicial proceeding.

The general rule as to estoppel to assume inconsistent positions in judicial proceedings generally, as discussed, with its qualifications, in § 117 supra, has been expressly stated to apply, or has been applied, so as to estop a party to assume inconsistent positions in the course of the same judicial proceeding.[68]

Claim inconsistent with contract or title previously asserted. A familiar application of the rule is that a party to an action is estopped from asserting a claim inconsistent with a contract or title in himself or another previously asserted,[69] at least where his first position has been successfully maintained.[70]

Defense or objection inconsistent with previous position. A party to a judicial proceeding is estopped to make a defense or objection inconsistent with a position previously asserted, and successfully maintained, by him.[71] is not established by mere proof of unsworn statements by counsel, made in good faith, and which do not prejudice the adverse party.—Southern Coal & Iron Co. v. Schwoon, 239 S.W. 398, 145 Tenn. 191.

A party who has taken a position with regard to procedure,[72] which has been acted or relied on by his adversary[73] or by the court,[74] is estopped from taking an inconsistent position respecting the same matter, in the same proceeding, to his adversary's prejudice. This rule has been applied to inconsistencies respecting process,[75] changes of venue,[76] parties,[77] pleadings,[78] time of trial,[79] evidence,[80] or instructions.[81]

Admissions or allegations in pleadings estop the party making them from controverting or denying them or adopting a position necessarily inconsistent with them, in the same proceeding,[82] provided the essential elements of estoppel against inconsistency to be applied, it is commonly required that the parties be the same,[89] and that the same questions be involved.[90] However, some authorities have held that the parties need not be the same where the position assumed in the former proceeding was successfully maintained;[91] and, as appears infra §§ 121 and 122 respectively, judicial estoppel arising from pleadings or testimony in former proceedings may operate for the benefit of persons who were not parties to the former proceedings.

It has been held that what a defendant may do in a criminal court cannot be pleaded as an estoppel against him in a civil action;[92] but there is authority to the contrary.[93] A party cannot deny the validity of steps taken, or the truth of assertions made, by him in another proceeding which would impute to him fraud on administration of justice in such other proceeding.[94]

Position inconsistent with defense or objection interposed in prior action. A party who has successfully or effectively interposed a defense or objection in one action or proceeding cannot shift his ground and take a position in another action or proceeding which is so inconsistent with his former defense or objection as necessarily to disprove its truth or validity.[95] One who successfully pleads

Right to cut timber

Defendant who has defended his right to cut timber from plaintiff's land in plaintiff's action for trespass, on the ground that he had a right so to do under a contract, is estopped, after court has upheld validity of the contract in such action, from denying its validity in plaintiff's subsequent action under the contract.—Runnels v. Theory of case

(1) A plaintiff who successfully maintains an action on the theory that the causes of action there asserted were separate and distinct cannot in a subsequent action be heard to insist on the inconsistent position that the parties are identical relating to parties,[3] and verdict.[4] A mere consent to a matter of procedure in a case does not bind the party thereto never to litigate any question involved therein in any other case or court.[5]

Jurisdiction. Where a party successfully contends that the court has jurisdiction of a cause, he cannot question such jurisdiction in subsequent proceedings,[6] except, as appears in § 108 of the title Courts, as to jurisdiction of the subject matter. On the other hand, where a party successfully defends an action on the ground that the court is without jurisdiction, he cannot in subsequent action or proceedings assume a position inconsistent therewith.[7] However, it has been held that one who successfully asserts the validity of a decree of a foreign tribunal is not estopped to deny its validity in a subsequent action, the view being taken that the principle of equitable estoppel cannot be invoked to confer jurisdiction on a foreign tribunal.[8] A jurisdictional objection which prevails in one proceeding will not estop the party making it from interposing other objections in a subsequent suit on the same subject matter.[9]

Suit brought or defended in representative capacity. Where suit brought by or against one in a representative capacity is successfully maintained, the party asserting such capacity is estopped to deny it in a subsequent suit.[10] So, also, one who claims under proceedings successfully maintained by one who initiated such proceedings in a representative capacity is estopped to deny such capacity in subsequent proceedings.[11]

§ 120. Stipulations and Consents

In the absence of fraud or mistake, parties to stipulations and agreements entered into in the course of judicial proceedings are ordinarily estopped to take positions inconsistent therewith, at least where the party invoking the estoppel would be prejudiced or injured.

In accordance with the general rule against the assumption of inconsistent positions in judicial proceedings, stated in § 117 supra, parties to stipulations and agreements entered into in the course of judicial proceedings are estopped to take positions inconsistent therewith,[12] in the absence of fraud or mistake.[13] The rule has been held particularly apas well as the causes of action.—Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Waldo, 70 S.E. 1021, 9 Ga.App. 182.

(2) A party to an action who makes no objection to the court trying the action as an equitable action is bound to such theory in a subsequent action.—Michels v. Olmstead, Mo., 15 S.Ct. 580, 157 U.S. 198, 39 L. Ed. 671.

Intervention

A party, who secured exclusion of intervention by drawer of certified check, in a suit on the check against the drawee bank, cannot claim that the drawer was concluded by the judgment against the bank, because he conducted the bank's defense, and might have filed a bill of interpleader to require the drawer and the payee to litigate their controversy.—Koch v. Knowledge of fraud

A devisee named as executor was plicable where the stipulation has been acted on and the adverse party would be injured if it were not enforced;[14] indeed, it has been held that some prejudice, injury, or disadvantage to the party setting up the estoppel is indispensable,[15] and that he must have been misled, or induced to do what he would otherwise not have done, or to abstain from doing what he would have done.[16] Further, in order to create an estoppel, the agreement or stipulation must be coextensive with the claim which it is offered to defeat.[17] The agreement must be considered as a whole, in view of the previous dealings of the parties, and in the light of all the surrounding facts and circumstances.[18] A party who has violated such an agreement or stipulation cannot successfully contend that the other party is estopped by it.[19]

Stipulations entered into merely for the purpose of the suit are not operative as an estoppel in a subsequent action.[20] An estoppel cannot be invoked to enforce an agreement to do some act which is forbidden by law.[21]

Among the agreements, consents, and stipulations to which the foregoing rules have been applied are agreements as to the date of rendition of judgment[22] or for settlement of causes;[23] an agreement that a certain person is the common source of title;[24] stipulations for continuances;[25] stipulations that if a foreclosure sale is effected pending an appeal from the foreclosure decree, the proceeds shall be held in court subject to be disposed of pursuant to the mandate and decision of the appellate court;[26] stipulations that the judgment should be for a designated amount or nothing;[27] stipulations in a decree of divorce respecting the amount of alimony;[28] stipulations to waive service of writ or pleading;[29] and stipulations that the suit should abide the final decision to be made in another case brought by plaintiff,[30] that the trustee under a lost deed has power to sell,[31] that a deed be made to the heirs of the purchaser who died before confirmation of the sale,[32] that the judge might sign a skeleton bill of exceptions, which would be complete, except for the transcript of the testimony, and that this should be inserted as it was transcribed,[33] that certain articles not estopped from seeking cancellation of judgment of probate court denying probate of will on the ground that it was procured by fraudulent agreement between proponents and contestants by agreement to the appointment of contestant as administrator without knowledge of such fraud, since knowledge is an essential of estoppel.—Harris v. Harris, 93 So. 841, 208 Ala. 20.

Presumption of good faith

Court would assume that parties were acting in good faith toward each other at time they executed agreement whereby debtor agreed not to question validity of judgment.—Bancamerica-Blair Corporation v. Naphen, 200 A. 428, 61 R.I. 155.

Consent to verdict on cross action

Plaintiff was not estopped, by consent to a verdict for defendant on defendant's cross action, from insisting on a verdict in its favor on the original action, since defendant was not misled by plaintiff, or induced to do what it otherwise would not have done, or to abstain from doing what it would have done.—Boston Food Products Co. v. Wilson & Co., 139 N.E. 637, 245 Mass 550.

Notice of waiver

Where a surviving husband, son and granddaughter of deceased signed a waiver of notice in order to secure prompt probate of deceased's will, the son and granddaughter had not thereby estopped themselves from asserting that the surviving husband took realty as a tenant by curtesy, and that his second wife consequently had no dower therein.—Inman v. Recovery of property by illegal agreement

Where a party to a civil action, or one whose property was taken in such action, makes agreement with the officer having the property to give a redelivery bond, or makes a cash deposit in lieu of such a bond, and his property is released and returned to him, he cannot thereafter question the legality of the transaction relating to the giving of the bond or the making of the deposit, being estopped from so doing, although the transaction is not in conformity with the statute, but he may, in a proper proceeding, litigate the officer's right to hold the property and question the legality of the proceeding in which the property was taken.—Moss v. § 121. Allegations or Admissions in Pleadings in Former Proceedings

As a general rule, allegations or admissions in pleadings in a former proceeding will estop the party making them from denying their truth in a subsequent proceeding to which he is a party, where the usual elements of estoppel are present. Under the doctrine of judicial estoppel, a party may be estopped by his former pleadings regardless of injury to his adversary.

Although some authorities have held that a party is not estopped from denying in one action what he has admitted or alleged in his pleadings in an entirely separate action, although between the same parties,[38] it is a widely accepted principle that, subject to some qualifications and exceptions, allegations or admissions in pleadings in a former action or proceeding will ordinarily estop the party making them from denying their truth in a subsequent action or proceeding in which he is a party to the prejudice of his opponent, if the usual elements of estoppel by conduct are present.[39] Some cases have Adversary's admissions or allegations cannot ordinarily estop a party.—Mohawk Oil Co. v. Layne, D.C. La., 270 F. 841.

Disclaimer

Judgment creditor filing disclaimer in mortgage foreclosure proceedings was estopped to thereafter set up any claim in property involved which judgment debtor might acquire.—Kilpatrick Bros. Co. v. Campbell, 281 P. 471, 48 Idaho 194.

Proceeding not inter partes

The Salvation Army was not estopped from taking personalty under residuary clause in will because it had asserted, in a prior proceeding to determine validity of two wills of deceased, that personalty was given to another under will which was later declared invalid, since it had duty to present both wills, assertion was only a conclusion of law on undisputed facts, and probate proceeding is not an action between parties.—Durell v. Martin, 110 S.W. 2d 316, 172 Tenn. 97.

Parties held estopped

(1) Contractee suing municipality for breach of contract to close street was estopped by allegations in former suit denying existence of contract.—Industrial Co. v. Tompkins, Tex.Civ.App., 27 S.W.2d 343, error refused.

(2) An insurer which by its own construction of a policy admits liability in one pleading should be precluded from asserting later under the same state of facts that it is not liable because of an exception to coverage contained in the policy.—Columbia Casualty Co. v. Thomas, D.C.Fla., 20 F.Supp. 251.

(3) Maker of note was estopped on appeal from questioning ownership of alleged assignee where maker in previous action on same note by another party alleged as defense assignee's ownership.—Bank of Coushatta v. Burch, 148 So. 680, 177 La. 465.

(4) Plaintiff, averring, in action for use and occupation, that defendant entered with her permission, and not appealing from adverse judgment cannot assert contrary in subsequent damage suit.—Kertesz v. Feldheim, 139 A. 704, 6 N.J.Misc. 10.

stated the principle as applicable to allegations or admissions made under oath.[40] Clearly, where there is no actual inconsistency or conflict between the averments of the pleadings in the former action and the position taken in the subsequent action, there is no estoppel.[41]

In order to work such an estoppel, it is essential that the issues involved should be the same,[42] and that the allegations or admissions should have been material to the matters adjudicated in the former action;[43] further, there must have been a determination of the prior action,[44] or, at least, the allega-

(5) One making averment as to ownership of land in petition filed in judicial proceeding relating to title to property cannot show different title in subsequent proceeding involving same subject matter.—Strealy v. Spoonhour, 141 A. 250, 292 Pa. 378.

Parties held not estopped

(1) Affidavit, filed by secretary of corporation, reciting abandonment of charter, was held not to estop corporation from subsequently claiming interest in trade marks.—R. S. Howard Co. v. Robertson, 12 F.2d 827, 56 App.D.C. 292.

For the purpose of applying the doctrine of estoppel as to matters contained in a sworn complaint in a prior action, the court is not at liberty to select from the complaint such statements as are against complainant's interests, and to ignore those in his favor.[50] An estoppel based on former judicial ad-

50. Colo.—Central Trust Co. v. Culver, 129 P. 253, 23 Colo.App. 317.

Under statute so providing, estoppel to controvert a judicial confession or declaration cannot be invoked by dividing the declaration, the estoppel sought must be as to all of missions or allegations cannot be invoked to maintain a condition or state of things in violation of a prohibitory law.[51] By making a record in another case a part of his pleading, a party is not estopped from denying the facts adjudicated therein.[52]

Success of pleading. Some authorities have stated the rule as applicable to instances in which the allegations were successfully maintained;[53] and a number have held that judicial allegations of fact pleaded unsuccessfully cannot be made the basis for estoppel,[54] especially where the party urging the estoppel has not been forced into a disadvantageous position.[55] So, it has been held that admissions in pleadings in a former action which were successfully denied by the opposite party work no estoppel;[56] but there is authority apparently to a different effect.[57]

Pleader's ignorance or mistake. There can be no estoppel where the admissions or statements were made through mistake,[58] or without full knowledge of the facts,[59] especially where the facts were within the knowledge of the adverse party.[60]

Assertion of law or opinion. Statements in pleadings in a former suit which are merely assertions of conclusions of law[61] or assertions of opinion,[62] do not create an estoppel, particularly where such conclusions or opinions have been unsuccessfully pleaded.[63]

For and against whom estoppel operative. Estoppels by allegations or admissions in pleadings in a former action or proceeding arise only in favor of the declaration or none.—Land v. Land, 164 So. 599, 183 La. 588.

Successful assertion as estopping adversary

Where wife successfully defended creditors' suit against husband and wife on ground that debt sued on was community property, creditors were thereafter estopped from asserting, in subsequent suit against wife only, that such debt was separate debt of wife.—H. J. Smith & Sons v. Joiner, La.App., 172 So. 785.

or against the parties to that action or proceeding and those in privity with them,[64] unless, it appears to have been held, the party asserting the estoppel can show that he was misled or prejudiced by such allegation.[65]

Judicial estoppel. Under the doctrine of judicial estoppel, as distinguished from equitable estoppel by inconsistency, a party is estopped merely by the fact of having alleged or admitted in his pleadings in a former proceeding[66] under oath[67] the contrary of the assertion sought to be made. However, such estoppel does not operate if the original averment was made inconsiderately or mistakenly; it must have been made knowingly[68] and free of inducement by the opposite party.[69] At least in so far as this doctrine is applied to statements under oath, its distinctive feature has been said to be the expressed purpose of the court, on broad grounds of public policy, to uphold the sanctity of an oath.[70]

It is not essential under this doctrine that the adverse party should be prejudiced;[71] indeed, it is not even necessary that the party invoking the estoppel should have been a party to the prior proceeding,[72] at least where the party sought to be estopped had gained some advantage or been successful in the original proceeding.[73]

This doctrine is inapplicable where the former statements were immaterial,[74] where they were merely conclusions of law[75] or assertions of opin-

Prior proceeding unauthorized
Where prior attachment proceeding was instituted against defendant without authorization of owner of land alleged to have been damaged by the cutting and removal of timber, and owner caused the action to be dismissed and instituted an action for injury to property and the cutting and removal of timber, purported admission by plaintiff in the former proceeding that he had received part payment for the timber cut by defendant created no "estoppel" against him.—Byers v. ion,[76] or where they are not inconsistent with, or contradicted by, the assertions complained of.[77]

§ 122. Testimony in Former Proceedings

As a general rule, a party to a proceeding is estopped to contradict the testimony given by him in a former proceeding, at least where the elements of equitable estoppel are present; but some authorities do not recognize an estoppel to contradict such testimony. Under the doctrine of judicial estoppel, a person can in no event contradict his former sworn testimony unless it was made inconsiderately or mistakenly.

While a number of cases have held or broadly stated that a party is not estopped to contradict the testimony given by him in a prior action or proceeding,[78] nevertheless, under the principle of estoppel to assume inconsistent positions in successive suits, parties have been held estopped from contradicting their testimony given as parties in former proceedings[79] against the same parties,[80] at least if the elements requisite to an equitable estoppel are present,[81] but, it has been held, not otherwise.[82] Where there is no inconsistency in the testimony,[83] or the party sought to be estopped was honestly mistaken as to the facts,[84] no estoppel arises; and the statement of an opinion as to the legal effect of a contract, the facts being known to both parties, will not preclude testimony of a different interpretation on a subsequent trial.[85]

Where the facts established by other evidence make out the party's case, his claim ought not to be denied simply because he himself is estopped to testify so as to falsify his former testimony.[86]

Former testimony not as party. The fact that a person was a witness in a former litigation does not bind him by the result of such litigation, or conclude him from changing his testimony or making an inconsistent claim in a subsequent action to which he is a party,[87] at least in the absence of the necessary elements of an estoppel in pais;[88] and the rule has been applied where no one could sustain injury by the admission of the evidence,[89] where the testimony was merely an erroneous statement of a conclusion of law,[90] where the party in

Nonprejudicial silence

An employee who failed to testify, in suit by his employer against employee's surety to recover sums embezzled by employee, that he had repaid such embezzled sums was not barred by "equitable estoppel" from bringing subsequent action to enjoin execution of the judgment obtained by employer against surety on ground that such judgment was obtained by fraud, in that employee was coerced by threats of criminal prosecution into failing to disclose fact of payment, since equitable estoppel does not result from judicial allegations or testimony, unless party relying on estoppel is adversely affected thereby.—O'Sullivan v. whose behalf the testimony was given failed to prevail on his claim,[91] where the testimony given in the two suits was not clearly inconsistent,[92] where the witness did not know his legal rights and acted under a mistake,[93] where the witness was given no opportunity to testify as to the matters in respect of which an estoppel is claimed,[94] and where no determination was made in respect of the matters concerning which the testimony was given.[95] On the other hand, the testimony of the witness in the former suit may work an estoppel if to permit him to change it in a subsequent suit to which he is a party would operate to the prejudice of the party claiming the estoppel who has acted in reliance thereon.[96]

Subsequent testimony not as party. Testimony by a party to a proceeding does not estop him to testify differently in a subsequent suit between other parties.[97]

Former testimony of others. A party is not estopped by the testimony of others in a former proceeding to which he was not a party;[98] and a party in a case cannot be estopped or concluded by the mere testimony of a witness offered by the adverse party.[99] A party is not estopped by statements made by his own witness which were not material to the issues joined or could not affect the result,[1] or, it has been held, where such witness, when testifying in the former action, was not authorized, as his agent, to speak for him.[2] Obviously, a party is not estopped by the former testimony of his witness where he would not be estopped had he given such testimony himself.[3]

Weight of former testimony where no estoppel. Under the view first stated, that prior statements in testimony do not estop, the statements usually go merely to the question of the credibility of the witness.[4]

Judicial estoppel. Under the doctrine of judicial estoppel as applied in at least one jurisdiction, on grounds of public policy, a party or a witness who states facts under oath, whether in a deposition or during the course of the trial, is estopped to deny such facts in a subsequent suit to which he is a party,[5] although the parties to the second suit may not be the same;[6] but such statements will not estop the party from proving the truth, if he can show that they were made inconsiderately, by mistake, or without full knowledge of the facts.[7] The doctrine is inapplicable, however, where the alleged inconsistent statements are not patently inconsistent,[8] or if they involve a matter of opinion[9] or are immaterial.[10]

§ 123. Prior Recognition or Assertion of Authority, Capacity, Character, or Status

Parties to a transaction or course of dealing may be estopped to deny that the authority, capacity, character, or status of one of them was that which was recognized or asserted in the particular transaction or course of dealing.

If in a particular transaction or course of dealing the authority, capacity, character, or status of one of the parties is recognized or asserted as one of the basic facts on which the transaction proceeds, both parties are, as a rule, estopped to deny that the one occupied that position or sustained that character.[11] This rule has been applied in respect of guardians,[12] partnerships,[13] personal representatives,[14] receivers,[15] and school trustees and agents.[16]

Nevertheless the recognition of the authority or capacity must be clear and unambiguous in order to create an estoppel,[17] and the party invoking the estoppel must have been misled.[18] No estoppel arises where the acts relied on to create it are due to ignorance of the laws of another state which the party is not presumed to know;[19] and a person is not estopped to deny the right of a county to a fund which he is compelled to collect as statutory agent for the county in pursuance of an unconstitutional statute.[20]

§ 124. Official Certificates and Acts

An estoppel may arise out of official certificates and acts.

A party who acts in an official capacity may not thereafter assume a position inconsistent with his acts to the prejudice of another who has relied thereon.[21] Thus a sheriff who undertakes to forfeit a bail bond is estopped to deny its validity,[22] and a tax collector who executes a tax deed is estopped to deny receipt of the entire amount bid at the tax sale.[23]

On the other hand, the fact that an officer after abandoning his office signed a written resignation does not estop him from proving abandonment prior to the date of the resignation;[24] and an estoppel will not arise where the party sought to be estopped obtained no benefit and the party claiming the estoppel suffered no detriment.[25]

§ 125. Prior Assertion or Recognition of Right or Title

If the title of one party to property involved in a transaction is recognized and the dealing proceeds on that basis, both parties are ordinarily estopped to deny that title.

If in making a contract or in a course of dealing the title of one party or the other to the property involved in the transaction is recognized, and the

Mutual mistake as to owner of property

When owner of money pays it to another under a mutual mistake of fact that person to whom payment is made is owner, under doctrine of equitable estoppel owner cannot set up his title when payment has caused such change in position of person receiving same that it would be unjust to require him to make restitution; an irrevocable change of position, due to mistake by person receiving money, will prevent recovery, when parties were equally to blame for mistake or equally innocent.—Hatton v. Howard Braiding Co., 129 A. 805, 47 R.I. 47.

Estoppel arising from previous ownership

The wife of purchaser from mortgagee which purchased property at foreclosure sale was not subject to restrictions on use of property entered into by mortgagors after giving mortgage, on ground of estoppel arising from wife's previous ownership of property as one of grantees from mortgagors, where wife had no interest in property other than inchoate right of dower; and a purchaser from mortgagee and mortgagee were not estopped from denying any obligation by reason of restructive agreement imposed on property by mortgagors subsequent to execution of mortgage under foreclosure of which purchaser and mortgagee claimed ownership, where no reciprocal negative easement binding on mortgagee or purchaser existed and restriction in mortgagee's contract with purchaser was merely a personal covenant which could be enforced only by mortgagee.—Shedd v. Krushinski, 298 N.W. 490, 298 Mich. 160.

Recognition as consistent with subsequent acquisition of title

Persons having no interest in bankrupt corporation's personal property when one of them bid for some of it or when they received dividends on wage claims filed by them in bankruptcy proceeding were not estopped to claim ownership thereof in action brought by them after conveyance of bankrupt's realty with attached personalty to them by another corporation, which acquired interests therein of persons to whom property was sold by master under mortgage foreclosure decree and by trustee in bankruptcy, as no act of plaintiffs at such times could affect title to realty as against mortgagee; and the fact that attorney for such persons sought to purchase certain fixtures and equipment on premises over two months before clients' purchase, did not estop them from asserting ownership of such personalty in their subsequent action against another corporation, claiming ownership thereof as purchaser from bankruptcy receiver, as such attempt of attorney gave defendant no title to articles in dispute.—Kenny v. Acceptance of mortgage payment after conveyance

Mortgagee and creditor, accepting from mortgagor's attorney payment on a mortgage subsequent to mortgagor's conveyance of the land to his daughter was not estopped from disputing the daughter's title as acquired in fraud of creditors, although the attorney in paying stated that mortgagor "had nothing to do with the matter," since it was immaterial to the mortgagee who paid the money.—Hansen v. Corporate property in possession of officer

Where officer of corporation was in possession of property solely as agent, in trover suit against subagent, to whom officer had intrusted it to be kept, for recovery of property so intrusted, defendant was not estopped from contending that property was not that of plaintiff but was property of company.—Paschal v. relied on to create the estoppel must have been made by one in possession at the time.[29] It is also essential that the party against whom the estoppel is claimed did not act in ignorance of his rights,[30] and that he misled the party claiming the estoppel,[31] who changed his position in reliance on his acts.[32] The estoppel cannot be extended beyond the natural and reasonable import of the acts relied on to create it,[33] and one claiming an interest in property may be held to have a lesser interest than that originally asserted.[34]

A true owner of land is not estopped from showing his real title by offering to buy from an adverse claimant;[35] and, where a person has acquired title to lands by adverse possession, his verbal recognition of the title of the prior owner will not, it has been held, estop him from claiming title by adverse possession.[36] A seller of goods who files a claim for damages with a carrier is not estopped from showing that the goods belong to the buyer.[37]

§ 126. By Possession or Acts of Ownership under Claim of Title

A person who has taken possession of, or exercised acts of ownership over, property under claim of right is estopped to assert an inconsistent claim.

Where a person has taken possession of, or exercised acts of ownership over, property under claim of title or right, he is estopped to set up a claim inconsistent with that under which he has acted.[38] Thus a person is estopped from setting up an invalidity in the title under which he has had possession and exercised acts of ownership.[39]

However, possession or acts of ownership under a partial or qualified claim will not estop a person to assert his full rights.[40] There can be no estoppel unless the claim or title set up is inconsistent with that under which the party acted.[41] Where land is purchased by parties whom the vendor assures that he owns all the conflicting titles and will guarantee to them indisputable rights, they are not to be considered as holding under any one of the titles exclusively, but must be viewed as holding under that which would give them the best right, and they are not estopped from resisting eviction by relying on the elder grant.[42] An estoppel is not available in favor of one who has not acted in good faith but fraudulently.[43]

§ 127. By Possession in Subordination to Another's Title

A person who takes possession of property in subordination to another's title is estopped, as against the other, to deny that title until he has given up the possession so acquired.

One who takes possession of property in subordination to another's title is ordinarily estopped as against that other to deny that title until he has given up the possession so acquired.[44] The rule applies to one who takes an assignment of personal property, expressly subject to a mortgage, and obtains possession under such assignment;[45] to one who, under a contract of loan, agreed to repay a certain sum of money borrowed;[46] and to one who takes or holds possession under a contract of purchase.[47] The rule applies with equal force to a person who continues a possession antecedently held by him with the consent of the party whose title is in question.[48]

However, the estoppel lasts no longer than does the possession so acquired and on which it is founded,[49] and it extends only to the part of the premises actually occupied.[50]

§ 128. Claim under Written Instrument

A person cannot claim both under and against the same instrument.

A person cannot claim both under and against the same instrument.[51] Where the source of title asserted by both parties is the same, and plaintiff claims under a mortgage foreclosure while defendant claims through the mortgagor's will which contained the same description as the mortgage, defendant who had accepted surplus money from the foreclosure sale is estopped from asserting that the property described in the mortgage was not that which he occupied.[52]

§ 129. Requests

A person who requests another to act in a particular manner is estopped to take any position inconsistent with his request to the prejudice of the person so induced to act.

Where a person has acted or refrained from acting in a particular manner on the request of another, the latter is estopped to take any position inconsistent with his own request to the prejudice of the person so induced to act.[53]

However, a party who requests service from a public utility company after such company has without permission constructed its lines across his land is not estopped from asserting any rights he may have had prior to such request;[54] and the fixing of rates by a public service commission as requested by a railroad company does not estop the company subsequently from seeking to enjoin the enforcement of the order of the commission.[55]

VII. OPERATION AND EFFECT OF EQUITABLE ESTOPPEL

A. PERSONS AFFECTED

§ 130. To Whom Available

An equitable estoppel may be claimed by a party or privy, but not by a stranger or volunteer.

While it has been stated that titles by estoppel, not of record, have no effect except between the parties,[56] ordinarily estoppels in pais are available in favor of privies,[57] provided the privity is created after the event out of which the estoppel arises,[58] and provided the elements of such estoppel are present.[59] However, the mere fact of privity does not, of itself, entitle one to succeed to the right of estoppel.[60] Estoppels operate only between parties and their privies, either in blood, in estate, or in law.[61] A volunteer[62] or stranger to the subject matter made the basis of a claim of estoppel[63] cannot avail himself thereof. Likewise, a person who

Reason for rule

A person in privity is entitled to the benefit of an estoppel because he comes in after the fact creating the estoppel by succession or representation to the original title or interests.—Masten v. Olcott, 4 N.E. 274, 101 N.Y. 152.

Cotrustees

An estoppel against one trustee who is also the life tenant and remainderman with an optional general testamentary power of appointment, inures to the benefit of his cotrustees.—Brown v. Fidelity Union Trust Co., 9 A.2d 311, 126 N.J.Eq. 406.

Grantor and grantee

(1) One purchasing land from another who was entitled to invoke an estoppel as against claimants thereto may himself rely on the estoppel.
Ky.—Wabash Drilling Co. v. Ellis, 20 S.W.2d 1002, 230 Ky. 769—Lockhart v. Kentland Coal & Coke Co., 207 S.W. 18, 182 Ky. 673.

21 C.J. p 1179 note 30 [b].

(2) The subsequent grantees of realty acquired by them through succession in the chain of title stood in same position as original grantee and were in "privity" with him, as respects their right to set up estoppel as defense to claim of vested remainderman who had not joined in original conveyance.—Bailey v. Stedronsky, 13 N.E.2d 588, 57 Ohio App. 265.

(3) A mortgagee under foreclosed mortgage was deemed to be a "grantee" in chain of title from original grantee of land covered by mortgage, as respects mortgagee's right to set up estoppel as defense to claim of vested remainderman who had not joined in original conveyance.—Bailey v. Stedronsky, supra.

Seller

Seller of stumpage may intervene and recover cost of stumpage in buyer's suit against subpurchaser permitted to hold out cost of stumpage, where buyer acquiesced in subpurchaser holding out such amount.—Firment v. Eicher-Woodland Lumber Co., 5 La.App. 741.

Elements of equitable estoppel see supra §§ 67–77.

Absence of change of position

Where grantor, on death of grantee, was one of commission to partition land among his heirs, the fact grantor that did not, in such proceedings, assert reservation of one half of mineral interest in land, did not entitle such heirs at law, or their privies in estate, later to assert estoppel to claim interest in minerals against grantor or his privies in estate.—Central Bank & Trust Co. v. Wyatt, 131 S.E. 311, 191 N.C. 133.

Knowledge of facts

Purchaser of vendor's lien notes with notice of release of lien could not claim estoppel of payee to release lien where his predecessors in interest could not claim estoppel.—Allen v. Hall, Tex.Civ.App., 52 S.W. 2d 661.

Nonreliance

(1) An oral waiver by vendor in contract of sale of land of a condition that vendee could not assign his contract without written consent of the vendor was not available to an assignee of the vendee who had no knowledge of such waiver prior to the assignment.—Boyd v. Bondy, 194 P. 393, 113 Wash. 384.

(2) Corporation, which purchased property without knowledge of assurance given by mortgagee to former owner as to possession, could not in its own right claim mortgagee was estopped to take possession.—Hartford Realization Co. v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 167 A. 728, 117 Conn. 218.

is not a good-faith purchaser of a note and mortgage cannot claim an estoppel against the real and equitable owner of the note and mortgage.[64] A trustee to whom the owner of property has made a conveyance and who subsequently leased the property back to the owner cannot assert an estoppel against the owner to deny that the transaction was a mortgage, although it issued a prospectus asserting title to the fee was held by the trustee subject to a lease to the owner based on information supplied by the owner.[65]

In order that an estoppel by conduct may be asserted, the representation relied on must have been made to the party by whom or through whom the estoppel is set up,[66] with the purpose of influencing his conduct,[67] or it must have been of such a nature and have been made under such circumstances that the party making it must be taken to have contemplated that it would be communicated to, and acted on by, the other party.[68] When a representation is so general in its terms, or made under such circumstances, as to indicate that it was intended to reach and influence third persons or the community at large, the estoppel may be carried sufficiently far to protect every one who shall have innocently acted on, or been governed by, it.[69]

One who has himself expressly repudiated a contract cannot claim that the other party to the contract is estopped from alleging that the contract had been abandoned.[70]

§ 131. Against Whom Available Generally

Parties and privies may be subject to an estoppel in pais, and there is authority holding that the estoppel may be claimed against any person responsible for a representation although he is not jointly interested in the transaction.

Estoppels in pais are available against parties and privies,[71] provided the privity is created after the event out of which the estoppel arises.[72] However, the rule applies, it has been held, only when subsequent parties represent the rights and estate of the party who created the estoppel and nothing more, and does not apply to a party who, in the process of transferring real estate, has acquired a better title than his predecessor had.[73] An estoppel may be asserted, it has been held, against any person responsible for a statement or representation, although he may not be jointly interested in the enterprise or transaction.[74]

§ 132. Heirs and Personal Representatives

Heirs, next of kin, devisees, and personal representatives are bound by an equitable estoppel existing against the ancestor; but this is true of heirs only when they claim in the same right, and personal representatives of an insolvent estate, when representing the creditors, are not bound by such estoppel.

An heir stands in privity with the ancestor;[75] and an estoppel in pais enforceable against the ancestor is likewise enforceable against the heirs.[76] How-

Reason for rule

A person in privity is bound by an estoppel because he comes in after the fact creating the estoppel by succession or representation to the original title or interests.

N.Y.—Masten v. Olcott, 4 N.E. 274, 101 N.Y. 152.

N.C.—Citizens' Sav. Bank & Trust Co. v. White, 126 S.E. 745, 747, 189 N.C. 281, quoting Corpus Juris.

"Privity" as including participants in profits

"Privity" implies coöperation, but it also includes the thought of sharing or participating in profits from the act out of which estoppel arises. —American Machinery Co. v. Everedy Mach. Co., D.C.Pa., 35 F 2d 526.

Remaindermen

(1) Estoppel, will not run against remainderman, prior to the termination of the life tenancy where life tenant's conduct is consistent with duty toward remainderman.—Mullan v. Bank of Pasco County, 133 So. 323, 101 Fla. 1097—Commercial Bldg. Co. v. Parslow, 112 So. 378, 93 Fla. 143.

(2) However, this rule may not apply where it is shown that the remainderman had actual knowledge of a repudiation or abandonment by the life tenant of his status, and of the holding by him of the property under a different or adverse right, or where the life tenant in good faith and to the knoweldge of the remainderman claims title through sources other than as life tenant, or where there has been an ouster and disseisin of the life tenant or by one claiming through or under him under a claim of right or color of title followed by adverse possession for the statutory period, or where there is some special independent equity in favor of the purchaser who claims under a conveyance from the life tenant.—Mullan v. Bank of Pasco County, supra—Commercial Bldg. Co. v. Parslow, supra.

(3) A vested remainderman who, with knowledge of state of his title, permitted sale of his property by life tenant and received consideration therefor, is estopped from thereafter asserting his title not only against life tenant's immediate grantee, but against all those in privity with immediate grantee, including a mortgagee under foreclosed mortgage executed by remote grantee of property. —Bailey v. Stedronsky, 13 N.E.2d 588, 57 Ohio App. 265.

Prior position in judicial proceeding

(1) Sheriff undertaking to forfeit bail bond by judgment nisi estopped those accepting payment of money thereunder to deny validity.—Turley v. Tobin, Tex.Civ.App., 7 S.W.2d 949, error refused.

(2) A real party in interest, although not one of record, is estopped in a subsequent judicial proceeding against the same adverse parties on the same question to take a position in conflict with his former position to the prejudice of such adverse parties.—Amburgey v. Adams, 245 S.W. 514, 196 Ky. 646.

Surety on district clerk's bond, subrogated to school district in suing bank for conversion, was bound by estoppel against school directors arising from long acquiescence.—New Amsterdam Casualty Co. v. Robertson, 278 P. 963, 129 Or. 663, 64 A.L.R. 1396.

Doctrine of ratification

Although equitable estoppel may not apply, because claimants must not only be without knowledge, but without available convenient means of acquiring it, yet where claimants' father withheld a deed to himself and other promoters from record, accepting in lieu thereof a deed to the corporation, his heirs cannot be permitted to assume an inconsistent position and claim under such deed after his receiving benefits as promoter and stockholder.—Johnson v. Estoppel to claim property

Husband as administrator is estopped to claim property as that of deceased wife, where her conduct permitted his representation as sole owner in mortgaging property.—Moore v. Croft, 277 P. 425, 47 Idaho 568.

Circumstances not creating estoppel or waiver

(1) Where father, in consideration of bank's extending son's notes until father's death, agreed not to modify bequest to son in father's will and bank's trustees sought to impress a trust on all of father's property for payment of notes, father's legal representatives were not estopped from claiming that son's indebtedness to father should be deducted from any bequest payable to son under will.—Evans v. Cole, 281 N.W. 230, 225 Iowa 756.

(2) Admission in account of executrix of shares of next of kin was not a waiver by executrix' representatives of right to claim entire estate of her deceased husband, where it did not appear that executrix knew of her rights as widow.—In re Knapp's Estate, 253 N.Y.S. 409, 141 Misc. 540.

(3) Other matters see In re Knapp's estate, supra.

tate is insolvent, an estoppel against deceased cannot be asserted against the personal representative who represents the creditors; in such case the only privity existing is between the personal representative and the creditors.[83]

Decedent's estate. Where the elements of equitable estoppel are not present, the estate of a decedent is not estopped to assert the invalidity of an obligation of decedent as a claim against the estate.[84] However, the acts of the personal representative may estop the estate from claiming property of deceased as assets of the estate.[85]

§ 133. Grantees, Mortgagees, and Their Assignees

Unless a grantee has, or should have, knowledge of the facts giving rise to an equitable estoppel against his grantor, he is not bound; and a mortgagee is not subject to an estoppel against the mortgagor, although the assignee of a mortgage is bound by the assignor's estoppel to assert the mortgage.

As a general rule a grantee will not be estopped by any act, conduct, or declaration of his grantor of which he has no notice,[86] or which is subsequent to his conveyance.[87] A common grantee of several grantors is not affected by an estoppel existing against only one of his grantors.[88]

However, the general rule has no application in the case of a mere volunteer.[89] An estoppel of a grantor by conduct to assert title to property extends to his grantee.[90] It has been held that one acquiring a claim to ownership of land by a quitclaim deed would stand in the shoes of his grantor as to an equitable estoppel against the grantor to assert title against parties in possession.[91] Where a grantee at the date of his purchase knew of the existence of the facts which operate as a bar to the claim of his grantor, this knowledge will bar him;[92] and this is the case where he has knowledge which would have put him on inquiry, such as would have led to a knowledge of the facts.[93]

Written statements, signed by owners of land, in which they agreed to release the United States government and chamber of commerce of a certain city from liability for damages to improvements on land of which the government had been in possession under lease, in consideration of amounts set forth in their respective statements, are binding as against purchasers of improvements made on land by the government, such purchasers having agreed, as a condition to such purchase, to assume the government's liability to the owners.—Lesser-Goldman Cotton Co. v. 93. U.S.—Jones Store Co. v. Dean, C.C.A.Mo., 56 F.2d 110, certiorari

Mortgagees and assignees. A mortgagor by his manner of dealing with the property cannot affect the mortgagee's rights, and his acquiescence or consent cannot prevent the mortgagee from having removed an illegal obstruction on a street in which the mortgagee has an easement.[94] Likewise, the conduct of a mortgagor's vendor, even when estopping the vendor, will not estop a bona fide mortgagee.[95]

However, it has been held that the assignee of a mortgage stands in no better position than his assignor who has estopped himself from setting up the mortgage,[96] although acts or declarations of the assignor subsequent to the assignment cannot affect the rights of the assignee.[97]

§ 134. Persons Acting in Representative Capacity

A person acting in a representative capacity is subject to equitable estoppel, although, with some exceptions, an act done in a representative capacity will not estop one in his individual capacity, and vice versa.

The doctrine of equitable estoppel applies to bind a person in a representative capacity.[98] Thus the receiver of an insolvent bank,[99] an assignee in bankruptcy,[1] or an attorney[2] will be estopped by acts or representations of those with whom they are in privity where the latter would have been estopped thereby. It has been held that estoppels affect parties to actions for the use of another.[3]

Except where the acts of one, who has a dual capacity as representative and individual, are so connected and associated that it is impossible to distinguish his actions in one capacity from the other,[4] or where the act performed in a representative capacity has resulted in individual profit,[5] an act done in a representative capacity will not estop one in his individual capacity,[6] and vice versa.[7] The conduct of officers of a corporation in their official capacity may nevertheless estop them from asserting their rights as individuals.[8]

Lack of knowledge as preventing estoppel

A bankruptcy trustee who intervened in executor's action on county clerk's bond for money embezzled by his chief deputy, was not estopped from recovering portion of embezzled funds which had been assigned to bankrupt by testator, merely because testator's attorney had learned of certain improprieties in deputy's handling of money while still in safe deposit box, especially in view of facts that it was stipulated that trustee had no notice of the acts or conduct which it was charged constituted the estoppel and that clerk knew of bankrupt's interest in the money prior to the acts of testator's attorney.—Union Bank & Trust Co. of Los Angeles v. Los Angeles County, 81 P.2d 919, 11 Cal.2d 675.

Denial of sufficiency of tender

An attorney, who represented a mortgagor in making a tender after institution of foreclosure proceedings to mortgagees, having ceased to be attorney for the mortgagor and having taken an assignment of the mortgage, is estopped from saying that the tender was insufficient, either as to principal, interest, or costs.—Scheidell v. Lien of stockholder against corporate property

A stockholder of a corporation, who held a valid vendor's lien on its real estate, is not estopped by the fact that he was a stockholder from asserting such lien as against a void mortgage, which the corporation attempted to make without his knowledge.—Rader v. § 135. Cestuis Que Trust

An estoppel against the legal title holder binds an undisclosed cestui que trust.

An estoppel good against the holder of the legal title to land is good as against an undisclosed cestui que trust.[9]

§ 136. Strangers

An equitable estoppel is not available against strangers to the subject matter.

As stated in supra § 130, a stranger to the subject matter made the basis of a claim of estoppel cannot avail himself thereof; and by parity of reason an equitable estoppel is not operative against a stranger.[10]

§ 137. Creditors

The authorities disagree as to whether creditors are subject to an equitable estoppel against the debtor.

In some jurisdictions the view prevails that an estoppel which is operative against a debtor is also operative against his creditors.[11] In other jurisdictions the principles above stated have been repudiated and the rule seems to be laid down broadly that creditors are not bound by an estoppel against the debtor.[12]

§ 138. Estoppel against Public Government, and Public Officers

a. In general
b. Estoppel by statute or treaty

a. In General

An equitable estoppel ordinarily may not be invoked against a government or public agency functioning in its governmental capacity; but where the elements of an estoppel are present it may be asserted against the government when acting in its proprietary capacity.

While it has been asserted that estoppels against the public are little favored,[13] subject to limitations considered in this and subsequent sections, the doctrine of equitable estoppel may be invoked against public authorities as well as against private individuals.[14] As is sometimes stated, an equitable es-

toppel may be invoked against the United States, a state, a municipal corporation, or other governmental agency or instrumentality in respect of acts done in its proprietary or private capacity,[15] as distinguished from its governmental or public capacity in the strict scope of which it cannot be estopped;[16] and a failure to observe this distinction or to recognize and point out the absence of one or more of the essential elements of a perfect estoppel may be the reason for decisions and dicta which apparently deny this applicability of the doctrine of equitable estoppel,[17] especially as against a state or the United States,[18] for in some cases, it seems, the doctrine is less liberally applied against the United States or a state than it is against a municipal corporation.[19]

In some decisions it has been stated that the doctrine of estoppel in pais applies to the public only to the extent that it leaves the courts to decide the question by all the circumstances of the case and to hold the public estopped or not, as right and justice may require;[20] and where this view prevails

Discussion and reasons for rule

"In Iowa v. Tuskegee Light & Power Co., 168 So. 159, 165, 232 Ala. 361.

Departmental opinions, statements, and actions in respect of building requirements and factory operation in certain kinds of buildings may not, although misleading, serve as the basis of an estoppel against a public body since "there can be no estoppel against the public."—Delman, Inc., v. Exercise of police power

(1) Neither the state nor its agent, the city, can estop itself from the exercise of police power in protecting the health and welfare of the people.—City of Hutchinson v. White, 233 P. 508, 117 Kan. 622.

(2) Neither contract nor prescription can be interposed to defeat the exercise of the police power, and much less can an estoppel in pais be invoked as against public interest.—Liles v. Creveling, 268 S.W. 625, 151 Tenn. 61.

Controversies between public bodies

Although estoppel may not generally be invoked against a public body acting in a governmental capacity, exceptions may be made where justice and right so require, as in the case of controversies between two classes of the public.—State ex rel. Consolidated School Dist. No. 2 of Pike County v. Haid, 41 S.W.2d 806, 328 Mo. 729, quashing certiorari Consolidated School Dist. No. 2 of Pike County v. Matters affecting public interest

A suit involving only the constitutionality of a statute requiring a sheriff to turn over all fees in excess of the salary and office requirements does not affect the public interest to such an extent as to prevent the invoking of the principle of estoppel, since essentially all that is at stake in the suit is the private interest and convenience of the officer.—Saylor v. Presence or absence of elements of estoppel. Where the public as represented by the federal government, a state or municipal government, or other agency, is subject to equitable estoppel, it may be estopped where the necessary elements or grounds of estoppel are present,[22] as where an inconsistent position has been assumed,[23] or where the governmental body or agency has induced or permitted improvements or expenditures on the strength of its express or implied representations.[24]

Negative character of estoppel

In connection with the statement of the text it has been asserted that estoppel is negative rather than positive in its nature, and that the principle that the public is estopped, or not, as right and justice may require is not one to be so applied as to promote justice by positive acts but is rather a doctrine invoked merely to prevent injustice and fraud.—Trustees of Schools v. Village of Cahokia, 192 N.E. 565, 357 Ill. 538—Melin v Community Consol. School Dist. No. 76, 144 N.E. 13, 312 Ill. 376.

Proof of expenditures as necessary

City is not estopped to enforce amended zoning ordinance introduced several days before, and adopted short time after plaintiff obtained one year permits to install gasoline tanks and pumps and to erect filling station on property which, under amended ordinance, was transferred from commercial to residential district, in absence of evidence showing how much, if anything, plaintiff expended before police interfered.—Geneva Inv. Acts in which state did not participate

The state cannot be estopped to claim title to its own territory by exercise of unlawful authority thereover by some other government or by an assumption of sovereignty in which the state has no part and to which the people of the state have never consented.—Wortham v. Walker, 128 S.W.2d 1138, 133 Tex. 255.

Inequitable conduct and irreparable injury as essential

Inequitable conduct of city and irreparable injury to persons acting in good faith in reliance thereon are essential to create estoppel in pais against city.—Stuart v. City of Neenah, 255 N.W. 142, 215 Wis. 546.

Consent to action as precluding estoppel

A city, agreeing to public service commission's proposed broad survey and investigation, which resulted in delay in determination of rate for furnishing of water to such city by another city, cannot claim estoppel of city furnishing water to claim any advantage through such delay on ground that it resulted from apa false and material representation,[26] or where such agency lacked the essential knowledge or intent,[27] or where the person claiming estoppel did not rely, or should not have relied, on the representation,[28] or could have learned the facts by the exercise of reasonable diligence,[29] or was not injured as a result of the act or statement of the governmental body,[30] and there can be no estoppel where plication by such city.—City of Milwaukee v. City of West Allis, 294 N. W. 625, 236 Wis. 371.

Failure to observe law in other instances

In suit against mayor and city council by former police officer for injunctive relief and for reinstatement to police force, it was no answer to defense that plaintiff at time of application was more than fifty years of age and therefore ineligible, that council had appointed others who were over fifty years of age, since the fact that council had failed to observe the law in other instances would not redound to plaintiff's benefit by way of "estoppel", although the fact might be considered in support of a charge that his removal was capricious or arbitrary.—Callis v. Brown, 142 S.W. 2d 675, 283 Ky. 759.

Deportation as affecting military conscription

Jurisdiction to subject a resident Canadian registrant to the draft was not lost by estoppel or waiver, because after his exemption under the first call, afterward revoked, he was sent back to Canada by the immigration authorities as having unlawfully entered, where he returned on a permit and remained until after the Canadian-American Convention went into effect.—Morris v. Where the governmental authorities lacked knowledge of the falsity of the representations, there could be no estoppel.—Biglow v. Ritter, 108 N.W. 218, 131 Iowa 213—21 C.J. p 1190 note 11.

Where statutes of limitations inapplicable. The general rule, in the absence of a contrary provision of law, that statutes of limitations do not run against the government or the public, see the C.J.S. title Limitations of Actions § 15, also 37 C.J. p 710 note 97–p 714 note 20, has been frequently rendered inoperative in equity by the enforcement of an equitable estoppel against the public;[32] and, indeed, in invoking the doctrine time may not materially affect the case,[33] if, as is always necessary, as explained above in this section, the essential elements of an estoppel are present. While title cannot be acquired against a municipality by adverse possession, the same result may be reached by application of the doctrine of equitable estoppel, as where the municipality is estopped by long continued abandonment or by inequitable conduct to assert its rights in land.[34]

On the other hand, it has been stated that the state is not embraced within the statute of limitations and that by analogy it would not fall within the doctrine of estoppel.[35]

Acquiescence, laches, and nonaction. Mere acquiescence, laches, lapse of time, or nonaction on the part of the public or the public agents or officers does not ordinarily work an estoppel.[36] No estoppel ordinarily results from acquiescence in the

Prejudice as element of estoppel see supra § 74.

Profit rather than prejudice

A county was not estopped from asserting title to a roadway to a ferry crossing by reason of its permitting the grantor to clear and cultivate the land for years, where the landowner profited by the use of the land in excess of expenditure made in clearing it, landowner not paying any taxes upon the same.—Humboldt County v. Van Duzer, 192 P. 192, 48 Cal.App. 640.

Estoppel of drainage district in favor of city

Where county court unauthorizedly made an order permitting municipality to connect its sewage disposal plant with ditch of drainage district, and court revoked the order thirteen days later during same term of court, and municipality had accomplished no substantial construction in the interval, district was not estopped from seeking injunction to restrain municipality permanently from connecting its plant with ditch.—Thompson v. Partial responsibility of party claiming estoppel

Iowa.—Shultz v. City of Oskaloosa, 187 N.W. 867, 193 Iowa 781.

Slight encroachments as sufficient

Fixtures

Where a town, having accepted gift of a bell, delivered it, or consented to its delivery, to a church knowing that it was to be placed in belfry, and, except for certain conditions, that it would become part of realty, town is estopped to set up title against bona fide purchaser of the church building, record of conditions of gift to town not being constructive notice to such purchaser.—Inhabitants of Town of Andover v. violation of a law,[37] or from failure to collect fees,[38] or from delay in bringing suit.[39]

However, inaction may supply the element of representation necessary to constitute an estoppel as against a municipality,[40] and a municipality may be estopped where, in addition to lapse of time, there appear circumstances rendering it contrary to right and justice for the public to exercise a particular power, or to deny the validity of an act or contract;[41] and there is authority holding that an estoppel by laches may be asserted against the state[42] or other governmental entity.[43]

Accepting benefit of repairs to vessel

United States seeking forfeiture of seized vessel was not estopped to claim repairer was not entitled to lien because officer of government stood by and permitted repairs to be made.—La Mascotte IV, D.C.N.Y., 6 F.Supp. 695.

Failure to object to diversion of waters

City was not estopped to assert prior right to waters of river because of failure to object to prior diversion.—City of San Diego v. Cuyamaca Water Co., 287 P. 475, 209 Cal. 105.

Mere denial or waiver of public rights does not estop state or any of its branches.—Booth v. Los Angeles County, 12 P.2d 72, 124 Cal.App. 259.

Tacit approval

Where county school trustees entered into a contract undertaking to pay for maps showing a redistricting of the county into school districts, the fact that the commissioners' court met with the trustees and tacitly approved the contract would not estop the county from denying liability.—Collin County v. Schultz, Tex.Civ.App., 243 S.W. 609.

Consideration of delay in balancing equities

The government's delay in claiming title to school lands on ground that they were of known mineral character at time of official survey, so that title remained in the government, did not work estoppel against the government, but such delay could be considered in dealing with claims of a good-faith transferee for operating costs and expenses.—U. S. v. Standard Oil Co. of California, D.C. Cal., 21 F.Supp. 645, affirmed, C.C.A., Standard Oil Co. of California v. U. 39. U.S.—U. S. v. Standard Oil Co. of California, D.C.Cal., 20 F.Supp. 427.

Delay in contesting increase in rates of utility

A city is not estopped from maintaining a suit to enjoin the charging of increased rates by a gas company by the fact that it took no action on notice of the intended increase, but waited until the increased rates had been put in force.—Southwestern Gas & Electric Co. v. City of Shreveport, C.C.A.La., 261 F. 771, affirming, D.C., City of Shreveport v. Southwestern Gas & Electric Co., 258 F. 59, and certiorari denied 40 S.Ct. 394, 252 U.S. 585, 64 L.Ed. 729.

Suit to establish ownership

No estoppel arose from mere delay of United States in bringing suit to be declared owner of school lands on ground that they were of known mineral character at time of official survey, acquiescence or nonaction, even though it resulted in inducing expenditures by occupants of lands, and, in suit by the United States, defendants could not raise as element of estoppel that government's delay in bringing suit brought loss of evidence.—U. Estoppel by laches allowed

(1) Where for many years the county authorities knowingly permitted the sheriff to deal with the money received from the federal government for care of its prisoners as a personal matter without account-

Acceptance of benefits. It has been broadly held that irrespective of the rules affecting municipalities, which are considered supra § 111, the United States or a state cannot be estopped by acceptance of benefits.[44] However, other authorities hold that the state may be estopped by acceptance of benefits,[45] as where it is estopped to deny the validity of a contract irregularly entered into.[46] At any rate, no estoppel results where no benefits were in fact received.[47]

Private individuals. While an individual may be estopped to invoke an estoppel against the public,[48] it has been held that the doctrine of estoppel will not apply to a private individual where the public interest is concerned,[49] and that one private individual cannot be given an advantage over another by claiming an estoppel against the public.[50]

b. Estoppel by Statute or Treaty

The public may estop itself by legislative enactment or treaty, although the right to legislate may not be precluded by an estoppel in pais.

It seems to be conceded that the public may estop itself by a valid legislative enactment or ordinance.[51] Further, it seems to be conceded that the

ing, the county was estopped as to past transactions by its laches from requiring the sheriff to pay the full amount received into the county treasury and then resort to his claim against the county for reimbursement, but, if necessary for his protection, the sheriff should be permitted to retain and apply as money advanced by him all amounts shown to have been legitimately expended by him in support of the federal prisoners prior to the commencement of the county's action against him to compel an accounting.—Los Angeles County v. Cline, 197 P. 67, 185 Cal. 299

(2) Where city, although disputing with county over right to receive percentages of gross receipts paid by railroad to county under franchises, permitted railroad to make such payments to county for fifteen years without objection, city was barred by laches from recovering from railroad amounts paid by railroad after city annexed territory wherein railroad operated.—City of Los Angeles v. Los Angeles County, 72 P.2d 138, 9 Cal.2d 624, 113 A.L.R. 370.

Thirty years' delay

Where appellant county joined in the reconstruction of a bridge, and in its maintenance as an intercounty bridge, for thirty years, it was held that notwithstanding the bridge was not formally recorded in appellant county as a county bridge, which would have been a valid objection if interposed before bridge was reconstructed, it was estopped from asserting that fact thirty years later. —Union County v. Benefits of court order

The doctrine that state department cannot be estopped by public officers' unlawful acts does not apply in death action against state highway department, as state department's status as litigant in case wherein it is permitted by law to be sued is subject to same rules as other litigants, in absence of contrary statutory provisions, so that it cannot accept benefits incident to performance of condition precedent required by court order and deny adverse party rights predicated thereon.—Jordan v. 46. La.—Reeves v. Leche, 195 So. 542, 194 La. 1070.

Acceptance of rentals under lease

(1) Where the state accepted rental payments for several years in accordance with terms of a state mineral lease, and lessee's obligations under lease had been complied with, and the state did not tender to lessee the money received under lease, the state was "estopped" from asserting that lease was invalid on ground that advertisement for bids contained an error with respect to date at which bids would be received at governor's office.—Reeves v. Leche, supra.

(2) The state and the register of the state land office, after accepting rental payments under oil, gas and mineral lease for several years were estopped to deny validity of the lease because of irregularities in publishing notice of the letting.—State ex rel. 47. Idaho.—State ex rel. Wright v. Gossett, 113 P.2d 415.

The state was not estopped from questioning constitutionality of statute providing for payment of compensation to speaker of house of representatives and lieutenant governor as president of senate for remaining in Boise, Idaho, in their official capacity a sufficient length of time to complete the unfinished business of the legislature, since the state received no benefit from either the lieutenant governor or the speaker of the house by reason of the services rendered after the session adjourned excepting those benefits which such officers were already required to render to the state and for which a compensation in entirety was fixed.—State ex rel. Estoppel to deny recitals in ordinance

In action against a city to recover money apparently deposited under an ordinance to indemnify the city against damages, the city is estopped in law and equity to urge as a defense that the money was paid in under an illegal agreement whereby the city was to keep the money, and from stultifying itself by urging the illegality of the ordinance in question as a defense to depositor's claim for the money, and to deny the truth of the facts recited in the ordinance. —Teich v. public may estop itself by treaty,[52] provided the elements of an estoppel are not lacking.[53]

However, municipal authorities are not estopped from denying the validity of an ordinance to the extent that it conflicts with the law or public policy of the state,[54] and a municipality will not be estopped from questioning the validity of a statute under which it has proceeded.[55] An erroneous construction of a statute by a municipality, although acted on for a long period of time, will not bind it.[56]

Right to legislate. The state may not be deprived of the right to legislate by a mere estoppel in pais.[57]

§ 139. General Rule Stated

The general rule respecting the estoppel of the public is stated and discussed supra § 138.

§ 140. Federal and State Governments

a. In general
b. Sovereign and proprietary functions
c. Criminal laws and prosecutions

a. In General

In a proper case an equitable estoppel may be asserted against the federal and state governments.

It has been broadly stated that there can be no estoppel against the United States[58] or a state.[59] Nevertheless, subject to limitations and exceptions considered supra § 138, it is well established that in a "proper case" the doctrine of equitable estoppel may apply as against the federal and state governments,[60] and that under circumstances which would estop a private individual an estoppel may be asserted against the United States,[61] a state,[62] or a state agency, commission, or officer.[63]

b. Sovereign and Proprietary Functions

The United States or a state ordinarily is not estopped when acting in its sovereign, as distinguished from its proprietary, capacity.

When acting in its sovereign or governmental capacity, the United States[65] or a state[66] ordinarily is not estopped. Collection of poundage fees
The state was not estopped from claiming statutory lien on equipment of cannery, to enforce payment of poundage fees required of cannery, by delay in bringing suit and fact that owner of the property expended considerable sum of money in removing the property from the cannery, in view of fact that the state in collecting poundage fees was acting in "governmental capacity."—State v. Swensk, 89 P.2d 587, 161 Or. 281.

Control of waters
(1) Federal government will not be estopped to sue for injunction restraining withdrawal of water from Lake Michigan in excess of that authorized by secretary of war under Act March 3, 1899, § 10, to prevent level of lake from being lowered, if strict construction of government's act, on which estoppel is sought to be predicated, would avoid estoppel.—Sanitary Dist. of Chicago v. U.

On the other hand, when functioning in a proprietary, as distinguished from a governmental, capacity, the doctrine of estoppel may be applied to the United States[71] or a state.[72]

c. Criminal Laws and Prosecutions

Estoppel of the people apparently is not favored in connection with criminal laws and prosecutions, but under some circumstances the doctrine of estoppel may be applied.

The doctrine of estoppel does not, it has been held, apply as against the people in criminal prosecutions,[73] and it has been asserted that the government may be estopped in the enforcement of criminal laws only by some sound public policy, as when its officers have lured accused into the commission of a crime.[74] On the other hand, it has been held that the state is bound by a position assumed by it in a criminal proceeding.[75]

§ 141. Municipal and Quasi-Municipal Corporations in General

a. In general
b. Governmental or proprietary functions

a. In General

Unless it is necessary to further justice, an equitable estoppel ordinarily may not be asserted against a municipal or quasi-municipal corporation.

The principle of estoppel in pais ordinarily is inapplicable to municipalities and quasi municipalities.[76] Nevertheless, in exceptional cases and in furtherance of justice and right, an equitable estoppel may be asserted against a municipal or quasi-municipal corporation,[77] although the courts apply

S., Ill., 45 S.Ct. 176, 266 U.S. 405, 69 L.Ed. 352.

(2) United States is not estopped to sue for injunction restraining withdrawal of water from Lake Michigan in excess of that authorized by the secretary of war under Act March 3, 1899, § 10 because level of lake is being lowered thereby, by Act March 30, 1822, or by Act March 2, 1827, or by issuance by secretary of war of permits authorizing withdrawal of amount greater than that permitted at time suit is brought, and subsequently revoked.—Sanitary Dist. of Chicago v. U. S., supra.

Protection of Indians

(1) Where acts of mining trustees and assignments of lease of Indian coal lands were made ineffectual without approval of the secretary of the interior by act of congress and secretary's regulations, which have the force and effect of law, the defenses of estoppel, ratification, and laches could not be urged in an action by the United States to recover royalties due under lease, since to permit that prerequisite to validity to be rendered unnecessary by application of those defenses would thwart the public policy of the United States to afford protection to Indians with respect to leases of coal lands.—American Surety Co. of New York v. U. S., C.C.A.Okl., 112 F.2d 903.

(2) The surety on a bond executed by lessee of Indian coal lands could not, for purpose of claiming an alteration of its contract of suretyship resulting in its discharge, assert that mining trustees permitted lessee's assignee to carry on operations under an assignment which did not have requisite approval of the secretary of the interior and, for purpose of avoiding ineffectiveness of assignment because of lack of such approval, assert that the United States was estopped to deny the validity of the assignment.—American Surety Co. of New York v. Collection of fund claimed in proprietary capacity

Where the state, as a creditor, seeks to collect a fund claimed in its proprietary capacity, the state is bound in its business relations with individuals by the same general principles as control dealings between men and may be subjected to an equitable estoppel.—State v. Affirmative acts

For some purposes the doctrine of estoppel is applicable to municipal corporations, not because of the mere nonaction of its officers to assert a right, but because of some affirmative action influencing another which renders it inequitable for the corporate body to assert a different set of facts.—State v. Town of Hessville, 131 N.E. 46, 191 Ind. 251, rehearing denied 132 N.E. 588, 191 Ind. 251.

the doctrine with caution and only under circumstances clearly demanding its application to prevent manifest injustice.[78]

There is nothnig in the nature of a municipal corporation to exempt it from the application of the doctrine of estoppel as it would apply to a natural person or to a business corporation,[79] and, subject to important restrictions and qualifications,[80] it is well settled that as to matters within the scope of its powers and the powers of its officers[81] the doctrine of equitable estoppel may be applied as against a municipal corporation[82] or quasi-municipal corporation.[83] Thus in a proper case an equitable estoppel may be allowed against a city,[84] coun-

Stricter application of ultra vires doctrine

As regards the assertion of an estoppel against a municipal corporation, the courts will apply the doctrine of ultra vires more strictly in the case of a public, than in the case of a private, corporation.—Baird v. Divide County, 228 N.W. 226, 58 N.D. 867.

Estoppel as limited to contractual relations

Acquiescence in violations of contract

Plaintiff city, with which defendant contracted to construct subways for electric lines and rent space therein, and annually pay to plaintiff the net annual profits in excess of ten per cent on the actual cost to defendant for construction, is estopped to claim a forfeiture of the contract for defendant's omission to keep books and make annual reports to plaintiff's comptroller, as required by the contract, having acquiesced

ty,[85] the District of Columbia,[86] a drainage district,[87] irrigation district,[88] parish,[89] police jury,[90] school district,[91] town,[92] township,[93] or village.[94]

On the other hand, as shown supra § 138, none of such political entities or corporate bodies may be estopped where the essential elements of an estoppel are absent; and the doctrine of estoppel may not be applied to a governmental agency to effect a violation of law.[95]

b. Governmental or Proprietary Functions

In respect of its governmental functions a municipal or quasi-municipal corporation ordinarily may not be estopped; but such an entity may be estopped as to acts done in its proprietary capacity, although in doubtful cases the doubt is resolved in favor of the municipal corporation.

In respect of its governmental functions a municipal or quasi-municipal corporation ordinarily may not be estopped.[96] Thus ordinarily it is not es-in such violations and required defendant from time to time thereafter to continue construction work.—City of New York v. Consolidated Telegraph & Electrical Subway Co., 188 N.Y.S 666, 196 App.Div. 689, affirmed 135 N.E. 923, 233 N.Y. 574, remittitur amended 135 N.E. 970, 233 N.Y. 686.

Public rights

An estoppel does not lie in respect of public rights except under special circumstances which make it highly inequitable or oppressive to enforce such rights.—People ex rel. Petty v. Thomas, 198 N.E. 363, 361 Ill. 448—Melin v. Community Consol. School Dist. No. 76, 144 N.E. 13, 312 Ill. 376.

County acting for state

Board of Com'rs of Ottawa County, 1 P.2d 88, 133 Kan. 528.

Collection of revenues

In county's capacity as governmental agency to collect and conserve public revenue, it is not estopped by unauthorized acts of its officials—Board of Com'rs of Sedgwick County v. Conners, 245 P. 1030, 121 Kan. 105.

98. Storage of seized automobiles

County, exercising governmental function in storing automobiles seized on criminal charges against owners, is not estopped to deny liability for storage charges incurred after termination of prosecutions.—Los Angeles Warehouse Co. v. Los Angeles County, 33 P.2d 1058, 139 Cal.App. 368.

Public health

It is difficult for a municipality, even by express contract, to estop itself from legislating for the protection of public health—Park Hill Development Co. v. City of Evansville, 130 N.E. 645, 190 Ind. 432.

Selection of parish printer

Police jury, being political body, is not estopped to select parish printer, disregarding bids under unnecessary advertisement therefor since it was exercising governmental powers.—State ex rel. Lanier v. Tangipahoa Parish Police Jury, 120 So. 249, 9 La.App. 727.

Striking name of ineligible from civil service list

Where employee of city and county of Denver who had been provisional stenographer in police department for several years, was permitted to take civil service examination for police operator although he was over the age limit, on condition that he waive his pension rights, and employee passed examination and was placed on the eligible list, the city and county on discovering that members of the police department could not waive their pension rights, had duty to and was not estopped from striking employee's name from the eligible list.—Edwards v. Judicial caution

"When the doctrine of equitable estoppel is applied to municipal corporations in matters pertaining to governmental functions, much caution is to be, and should be, observed."—City of Mountain View v. Farmers' Telephone Exch. Co., Mo. App., 224 S.W. 155, 157, affirmed 243 S.W. 153, 294 Mo. 623.

Necessity for affirmative acts

Before the doctrine of estoppel can be invoked as against a municipal corporation acting in its governmental capacity, there must have been some positive acts by the municipal officers which may have induced the action of the adverse party under circumstances making it inequitable to permit the corporation to stultify itself by retracting what its officers have done, mere nonaction by officers or adverse possession being insufficient.—Melin v. Community Consol. School Dist. No. 76, 144 N.E. 13, 312 Ill. 376.

Matters constituting estoppel

Where districts, affected by order of county committee on common schools annexing territory to a joint district, ignored such order, and for a period of two years neither the joint district nor the others operated under such order, but all the districts involved actually participated in the formation of another joint school district which included a great portion of an annexed territory, such districts were estopped to assert any rights under the order so disregarded, St.1921 §§ 40.03, 40.06, although not applicable, being indicative of the question of public policy involved.—State v. Pohle, 202 N.W. 148, 185 Wis. 610.

topped in respect of property held in its corporate capacity[3] or in respect of its operation of public utilities.[4]

However, an estoppel against a municipality acting in its proprietary capacity will not be allowed to defeat a mandatory provision of a statute;[5] and, where there is doubt as to whether a municipality should be estopped, the doubt should be resolved in its favor.[6]

§ 142. Acts of Officers and Agents

a. In general
b. Unauthorized acts, admissions, omissions, or opinions
c. Estoppel of officer or agent in public or private capacity

a. In General

The public, in the exercise of a proprietary, as distinguished from a governmental, function, may be estopped by the acts or omissions of its officers acting within the scope of their lawful authority.

The public may be estopped by the acts of any public officer done in the exercise of powers expressly conferred by law.[7] The acts or omissions of its officers, when acting within the scope of their authority, may estop the United States[8] or a state.[9]

A municipal or quasi-municipal corporation as well as a private corporation[10] may be subject to an estoppel in pais from the words, acts, or conduct of its officers or agents as to its business affairs if acting within the scope of their authority,[11] even

Board of health is estopped from refusing to issue license to operate abattoir after applicant performed all conditions imposed by conditional

if acting as de facto officers or agents,[12] where the public is acting through its officers or agents in its private or proprietary, as distinguished from its governmental capacity,[13] and the subject matter is not ultra vires.[14] In its governmental capacity a public agency may not be estopped by the acts of its agents.[15] It has been stated that the doctrine of estoppel may be invoked against a municipality where there have been positive acts by municipal officers inducing action by the other party and where it would be inequitable to permit the municipality to stultify itself by retracting what its officers have done.[16] In determining whether a municipal corporation is subject in a particular case to estoppel, it is necessary to ascertain the scope of authority of the municipal agency through which the misrepresentation was made and the relationship of the misrepresentation to the execution of such authority.[17]

Draft law

Jurisdiction to subject a resident Canadian registrant to the draft was not lost by estoppel or waiver, because after his exemption under the first call, afterward revoked, he was sent back to Canada by the immigration authorities as having unlawfully entered, where he returned on a permit and remained until after the Canadian-American Convention went into effect.—Morris v. Johnston, Wash., 260 F. 821, 171 C.C.A. 547.

Public lands

(1) As to public lands, government, in view of its unlimited control of own domain and of fact that, in disposing of it, government does not assume attitude of mere seller of realty, is not estopped by mistaken assertion of facts by agents of land department.—U. S. v. Standard Oil Co. of California, D.C.Cal., 20 F.Supp. 427.

(2) The United States was not estopped from claiming title to school lands determined to have been of known mineral character at time of official survey by secretary of interior, by alleged offer by secretary of interior's predecessor to secretary of navy to convey the public lands to secretary of navy and his refusal to accept offer on ground that lands did not contain oil in commercial quantities.—U. S. v. Standard Oil Co. of California, supra.

(3) The United States was not estopped from claiming title to school lands on ground that they were of known mineral character at time of official survey, because of suspension from entry under agricultural laws and subsequent relief from suspension of township in which school lands were situated, nondisclosure of any indication to warrant classification of lands as mineral in examination by special agent, or that register of United States Land Office made statement to surveyor general of state that there were no adverse claims on record against section in which lands were located.—U. S. v. Standard Oil Co. of California, supra.

War risk insurance

The acts of officers and agents will not estop the federal government in connection with war risk insurance, although similar acts might constitute an estoppel if made in connection with policies issued by a private insurance company, since war risk insurance contracts are not issued by the government in its proprietary capacity.—Sternfeld v. U. S., D.C.N.Y., 32 F.2d 789—Coleman v. U. S., D.C.Tenn., 18 F.Supp. 71, affirmed, C.C.A., 100 F.2d 903.

17. Tex.—Payne v. First Nat. Bank, mental officers will not estop the federal, state, or a municipal government, as shown in subdivision b of this section, and their acts as individuals rather than as officials will work no estoppel against the governmental body;[18] nor may a municipality be bound by an act of its agent requiring legislative or executive action.[19]

A contract executed by persons not authorized to represent a municipality is void and the municipality may not be estopped to deny its validity.[20]

b. Unauthorized Acts, Admissions, Omissions, or Opinions

In the absence of subsequent acquiescence or approval, ordinarily the United States, or a state, municipality, or other governmental agency, may not be estopped by the unauthorized acts or omissions of its officers and agents; and it may not be estopped as to matters beyond the scope of its powers or in violation of positive law.

Ordinarily the public may not be estopped by the unauthorized, illegal, or fraudulent acts, admissions, conduct or statements of its officers and agents,[21]

Act beyond scope of officer's duties

There was no waiver by estoppel of a city as to the sufficiency of a notice of claim for injury to a pedestrian from a defect in street because the claim was drawn by the city engineer at the instance of claimant's son, such act not being in performance of any duty owing to the city.—Hogan v. City of Beloit, 184 N.W. 687, 175 Wis. 199.

Clerical error in records

Board of education of the city of Buffalo, not being bound by a clerk's error in copying into the minute book with an erroneous date a typewritten resolution continuing in force ordinances in effect prior to the true date, was not estopped from asserting, against a discharged principal of a school, that the period of or by their omissions or neglect,[22] or by their mistaken advice or opinions;[23] but a governmental body may, within the limitations of its powers, be estopped by its acquiescence in, and approval of, acts originally unauthorized.[24] An official's knowledge of the facts will not raise an estoppel when public funds have been illegally disbursed,[25] and the actual knowledge of municipal officers respecting the existence of a claim does not estop the municipality from setting up as a defense the failure to file the claim as required by statute.[26]

probation at the time she was appointed was two years—O'Connor v. Emerson, 188 N.Y.S. 236, 196 App. Div. 807, affirming 185 N.Y.S. 49, 113 Misc. 472, and affirmed 134 N.E. 572, 232 N.Y. 561.

Improper exercise of appointive power

The city and county of Denver was not estopped from claiming that petitioner was not entitled to position of police matron of city jail under classified civil service by fact that manager of safety and excise had appointed petitioner as police matron, if appointment was improper because petitioner had not taken examination to qualify for position.—Smith v. Stapleton, Colo., 100 P.2d 162.

Purported waiver of statute and regulations

The unauthorized statement of a field agent that it was not necessary for a taxpayer to file a claim did not relieve the taxpayer from the duty of doing so in accordance with the requirements of statute and regulations governing such matter or estop the United States—Ritter v. U. S., C.C.A.Pa., 28 F.2d 265, affirming, D.C., 19 F.2d 251.

Unlawful deposit of public funds

(1) The rule that the state cannot be estopped by the unauthorized or illegal acts of its agents or officers applies to preclude estoppel of the state with reference to their unlawful deposit of state funds.—Fiman v. State of South Dakota, C.C.A.S.D., 29 F.2d 776, certiorari denied 49 S.Ct. 254, 279 U.S. 841, 73 L.Ed. 987.

(2) County was not estopped from recovering from county treasurer and the surety on his bond the amount of county funds which were lost when banks became insolvent, on ground that the banks were not legal depositories, because of the fact that county board exceeded its authority and designated the banks as depositories and told treasurer to deposit county funds therein, nor did the conduct of the county board constitute "constructive fraud."—Garfield County v. Pearl, 295 N.W. 820, 138 Neb. 810, certiorari denied Pearl v. Garfield County, Neb., 61 S. Ct. 1117

"Political bodies are not estopped by the unauthorized and illegal acts of their officers."—Murry v. Union Parish School Board, La.App., 185 So. 305, 307.

Right to assume compliance with duty

County is not estopped to recover on official bonds of county court clerk for excess fee for making out tax book for which he failed to account, on ground that county appropriated and paid such compensation, since county could assume that clerk was complying with law and paying excess into treasury.—State, for Use of Sullivan County, v. O'Dell, 84 S.W.2d 577, 169 Tenn. 248.

Failure to interpose timely defense

A board of education was not estopped by service of summons on the county superintendent, as its chairman, to have a default judgment vacated where the chairman negligently failed to present the defense in time, since neither the state nor any of its governmental agencies should be permitted to suffer any loss that must be borne by the public because of the negligence of a public officer and in this respect the rule differs from that applied to a private corporation, which would have been estopped under the facts of this case.—Clay County Board of Education v. Lewis, 218 S. W. 716, 187 Ky. 231.

Advice of water board

Advice constituting mere expression of opinion which was given by authorities of board of water supply to engineer when they offered him leave of absence without pay, or suspension under mistaken belief as to law relating to seniority, did not estop board from opposing right of engineer to formal reinstatement as of date of his application for leave since officers of a city have no power to impose liability upon city by estoppel.—Williams v. Gillespie, 291 N.Y.S. 513, 161 Misc. 156.

Opinion of counsel

(1) The state is not estopped from asserting the incompatibility of the offices of school district treasurer and county commissioner because of an opinion from the office of the attorney general given the treasurer of the school district before he became a candidate for county commissioner on which he relied that they were compatible.—State v. Sword, 196 N. W. 467, 157 Minn. 263.

(2) The city of New York was not estopped to hold the chamberlain of the city personally liable for loss resulting from unlawful investment of infant's funds deposited with the chamberlain, for which the city was liable to the infant, on ground that investment was made in reliance upon advice of the corporation counsel, contained in a written opinion rendered to a predecessor of the chamberlain.—Stanelevitz v. Acceptance of bond without requisite corporate surety

Where bond furnished to city by depository was executed by individuals as sureties instead of by a surety company, as required by the statute, the municipality was not estopped by the act of its municipal officers in accepting such bond from claiming that it was ultra vires.—Perkins v. State, 94 So. 460, 130 Miss. 512.

Allowance of claim

(1) A city or county is not estopped by the action of its council or supervisors in allowing an illegal claim in violation of law.—People v. Czaszewicz, 128 N.E. 739, 295 Ill. 11, affirming 216 Ill.App. 329—Cumberland County v. Edwards, 76 Ill. 544.

(2) Where statute requires the allowance of a claim against a county to be shown by a public record, and where the public record shows no such allowance, a county cannot be bound by county officials' certificate of genuineness of fictitious order allowing claim.—W. L. Slayton & Co. of Toledo, Ohio, v. Winston County, C.C.A.Ala., 24 F.2d 761, certiorari denied 49 S.Ct. 28, 278 U.S. 627, 73 L.Ed. 546.

(3) No estoppel can arise by reason of recognition of validity of claim by persons without authority. —U. S. v. Standard Oil Co. of California, D.C.Cal., 20 F.Supp. 427.

Forgery

The state is not estopped to recover against a depository which advances money to cash a state voucher by the fact that the forger of the payee's name is a trusted state employee, nor by any act or omission of any of its officers or agents.—State v. Merchants' Nat. Bank of St. Paul, 177 N.W. 135, 145 Minn. 322.

Issuance of insurance policies

An insurance company obtained no fixed right to issue policies forbidden by statute by reason of consent of state insurance department, nor would state be estopped from denying company's right to issue such policies by reason of such consent.—Department of Insurance of Indiana v. Church Members Relief Ass'n, Ind., 26 N.E.2d 51, 128 A.L.R. 635.

Misconstruction of statute

The alleged fact that department of interior for a period of years construed statute granting government lands to city for power project but prohibiting city from selling or letting right to sell or sublet electric energy to forbid only sale of power for resale did not create an estoppel against United States so as to preclude it from contending that the statute prohibited sale or distribution of power by any private corporation or individual.—U. S. v. City and County of San Francisco, 60 S. Ct. 749, 310 U.S. 16, 84 L.Ed. 1050, reversing, C.C.A., City and County of San Francisco v. U. S., 106 F.2d 569, reversing, D.C., U. S. v. Requirement that contract be in writing

A county was not estopped to assert invalidity of commissioner's oral contract to contribute to cost of road improved by township which was invalid under statutes requiring contract by county commissioners involving expenditures exceeding one hundred dollars to be in writing, since statutes requiring contract to be in writing were within cognizance of both parties, who were equally bound to observe statutes.—Township of Luzerne v. Administrative officer's conduct cannot estop legislative body of city from adopting and enforcing police regulation, such as zoning ordinance. —Lima v. Woodruff, 290 P. 480, 107 Cal.App. 285.

Issuance of permit under a zoning ordinance was the exercise of a governmental and not of a proprietary function, and where its officials issued a permit in violation of law the municipality was not estopped.—Lipsitz v. Parr, 164 A. 743, 164 Md. 222.

Permitting violations as bar to enforcement

The fact that certain city officials had permitted zoning ordinance to be violated for a number of years did not estop city from enforcing the ordinance.—Leigh v City of Wichita, 83 P.2d 644, 148 Kan. 607, 119 A.L.R. 1503.

30. Ky.—Robinson v. Town of Paintsville, 250 S.W. 972, 199 Ky. 247.

City engineer's prior consent to violations

The fact that a city, through its engineer, had consented on prior occasions to the construction of prohibited buildings within the fire limits fixed by an ordinance, and that the withholding of a permit from defendant to construct his building would discriminate against him, is no defense to a mandatory injunction to compel removal of a building erected without a permit.—Robinson v. Town of Paintsville, supra.

government or its instrumentalities are not estopped by acts or statements of agents in excess of corporate powers,[31] or where the subject matter is ultra vires or the contract wholly illegal;[32] nor may the acts of its agent estop the government from exercising its police power.[33] The rule denying an estoppel in such circumstances has been applied where the estoppel against the public is claimed in favor of a public officer or agent by reason of the acts or conduct of other public officers or agents.[34]

Acceptance of benefits. The general rule that the public is not estopped by the unauthorized acts or statements of its officers and agents is not affected by the fact that benefits accrue to, and are accepted by, the public.[35]

Apparent scope of authority. It has been asserted that the state is not estopped by the acts of its officers acting within the apparent scope of their authority,[36] and a fortiori the state is not estopped where the officer lacks even apparent authority to perform the act.[37] The rule that a private corporation which by its conduct leads one to believe that an agent has authority is therefore estopped to deny such authority does not apply to a public body.[38]

Persons dealing with public officers and agents are bound by the constructive notice of the law and the public records as to the measure of their powers and functions,[39] and the public cannot, by the rep-

Void lease by county board

A county board of supervisors which had leased part of courthouse grounds without power to do so was not estopped by execution of lease, by having a suit brought to cancel lease and having it dismissed, and by permitting others to acquire a lease of part of courthouse grounds from suing to cancel lease, since lease was void, and no estoppel could arise.—American Oil Co. v. Issuance of permit as bar to destruction of building

City was not estopped to destroy wooden building constructed and maintained within fire limits in violation of City and County of San Francisco Ordinance No. 1198, although building permit to construct building was issued by board of public works, the right to destroy building being an exercise of police power which cannot be bartered away.—Maguire v. Reardon, supra.

Obstructions in stream

The fact that earlier officers of a city may not have resisted encroachments on land appropriated for a channel of a deviating stream does not preclude the present officers from taking legal steps to clear the channel and prevent the placing of additional obstructions in the stream, since, in the exercise of the police power, neither a state nor any of its municipal agencies may be estopped to protect public rights.—City of Hutchinson v. White, 233 P. 508, 117 Kan. 622.

Statements of officials exercising police power

Only reliance which persons who perform work for state or any subordinate agency thereof can have is on language and proper interpretation of statute under which work is performed, and they can acquire no rights by way of estoppel either from their own mistaken interpretation of the statute or from the acts or statements of officials or agencies of the state engaged in the exercise of a delegated police power.—Sacramento and San Joaquin Drainage Dist. v. resentations of the officers as to this matter, be estopped to deny their authority,[40] even when acting within the apparent scope of their official functions;[41] and this rule applies to all persons whatsoever who deal with or claim under the municipality either directly or remotely.[42]

Effect of corporate seal. The seal of a municipal corporation attached to a contract does not estop the corporation from inquiring into the power of its officers to make it.[43]

Unlawful custom. The fact that unauthorized or illegal acts of officers and agents have continued for such a length of time as to become customs does not work an estoppel against a public body,[44] and it has been held that the fact that a person entered into a contract with a public officer undertaking to act for, and to bind, a city, does not estop the city from showing that the officer had no authority to make the contract by mere proof that the same officer had previously made similar contracts which the municipality had recognized as binding.[45]

Particular officers. The rule that a public body or instrumentality is not estopped by the unauthorized acts of its officials is peculiarly applicable to the acts of its ministerial officers,[46] or officers of limited authority.[47] An officer or agency of the United States to whom no administrative authority has been delegated cannot estop the United States even by an affirmative undertaking to waive or surrender a public right.[48] A city council may not estop itself from denying that an ordinance has been duly passed.[49] Where a matter is committed to one officer by statute, other officers may not by their conduct estop the municipality in respect of such matter.[50]

A public body may be estopped to proceed against its officials for illegal acts done by them in ignorance of their illegality and in reliance on orders of controlling officers,[51] but there will be no such estoppel where the officials knew of the illegality of their acts.[52]

Particular governmental bodies. The rule that the public may not be estopped by the unauthorized acts, statements, or omissions of its officers and

Acts of officers in excess of statutory or constitutional powers as estopping county see Counties § 174.

Allowance of claim by commissioners as prima facie evidence

Allowance of claim against county by county commissioners is only prima facie evidence of correctness of claim and county's liability thereon and hence county was not estopped to dispute liability on claim allowed which was not properly chargeable to county, or to recover payment made thereon.—U. S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Cherokee County, 156 So. 777, 26 Ala.App. 196, certiorari denied 156 So. 777, 229 Ala. 303.

Bureau's conduct without city's direction

Compensation bureau's conduct, inducing claimant to withhold filing petition for injuries until year expired, could not raise estoppel against city in the absence of a showing that the bureau's conduct was at the city's direction or suggestion.—Craft v. City of Trenton, 146 A. 366, 104 N.J.Eq. 375.

Matters exclusively within authority of city commission

An officer or employee of a city, not expressly so authorized, cannot bind or estop the city in matters placed exclusively within authority of the city commission, in absence of clear showing that conduct of subordinate officer was so closely related to expressed will of the governing body as to constitute his act that of the commission itself.—Hallman v. City of Pampa, Tex.Civ.App., 147 S.W.2d 543, error refused.

Similarity to rule against liability for negligence

"Estoppel, when applied against a city, imposes loss upon it or deprives it of a right which it would have but for the act constituting the ground of estoppel, and thus is in effect like liability for a negligent act. In both cases conflict arises between the rights or interests of the public and those of the individual. The rule is that when such conflict arises the rights or interests of the individual must yield. This is necessary because the city's public or governmental business must go forward, unimpeded by the fault, negligence, or frailty of those charged with its administration. A court which holds that a city is not liable in damages for injuries suffered from the negligence of its officer or agent engaged in the performance of a governmental function cannot consistently hold that the city is estopped by the act of its officer or agent engaged in the performance of a governmental function."—City of San Angelo v. Harbor commissioners

Where plaintiff rented space, under Pol.Code § 2524, from the state board of harbor commissioners, appointed under Pol.Code pt. 3 art. 9 tit. 6 c. 1, which was terminable on thirty days' notice at pleasure of commission, building of improvements, with or without knowledge of commission, did not create estoppel against commission, so as to enlarge plaintiff's tenure, since no action of commission can enlarge its powers beyond express limitations of the Code.—Taylor v. Spear, 238 P. 1038, 196 Cal. 709.

Industrial commission, being state agency, is not estopped to plead invalidity of its rules.—State ex rel. Kildow v. Industrial Commission of Ohio, 192 N.E. 873, 128 Ohio St. 573.

Levee district

U.S.—Board of Directors of St. Francis Levee Dist. v. Kurn, C.C.A.Mo.,

c. Estoppel of Officer or Agent in Public or Private Capacity

An officer or agent will be estopped in his official capacity wherever his acts would estop the governmental body; but an officer may not be estopped as an official by his unofficial conduct, although he may be estopped as an individual independent of any estoppel against him as an official.

The acts or conduct of a public officer or agent which operate as an estoppel against the public, see subdivision a of this section, also estop the officer or agent in so far as he may be considered a part of the governmental instrumentality,[57] but to that extent only.[58] Where the acts of a public officer or agent do not estop the public, see subdivisions a and b of this section, he himself is not estopped as to his official functions by such acts or conduct;[59] and a public official may not be estopped from the performance of his duties by his previous acts in an unofficial capacity.[60]

However, the acts or conduct of a person may work an estoppel against him as an individual independent of the estoppel created or not created against the public and himself in his official capacity in the exercise of his public functions,[61] unless the grounds or elements of an estoppel are absent, in which case there can be no estoppel against the officer in any capacity, as where through mistake of law an officer who accepts less compensation than

Park board, being unauthorized to delegate to park director authority to purchase animals, could not estop itself from denying director's authority.—Horne Zoological Arena Co. v. City of Dallas, Tex.Civ.App., 45 S.W.2d 714.

Public library board

The board of trustees of a public library is a public corporation and essentially a part of the municipal government, and no neglect nor omission of its officials can estop such body.—City of Owensboro v. Board of Trustees of Public Library of Owensboro, 276 S.W. 143, 210 Ky. 482.

Railroad commission

Estoppel as such would not operate against railroad commission because of failure of its tender board to discharge duty to enforce rules of commission relating to granting of permit to move entrapped fugitive crude oil, although such dereliction, apparently acquiesced in by the commission, would be admissible on the issue of discrimination.—Railroad Commission of Texas v. Lacy, Tex.Civ.App., 100 S.W.2d 118, error dismissed.

School district or board

(1) Where superintendent of school district unauthorizedly contracted with architect to make plans for school building and athletic field, plans were rejected, district neither acquiesced in employment of architect nor accepted benefits of architect's services, school district was not estopped to deny liability to architect.—Pehrson v. School Dist. No. 334, 77 P.2d 1022, 194 Wash. 334.

(2) The rule precluding estoppel based on the acts of state officials is pertinent to the officials of a school district, and school district cannot be estopped by its officials' knowledge of depositary bank's insolvency condition to assert treasurer's liability for negligent deposit and loss of funds therein.—Lane Independent Consol. School Dist. No. 1 of Jerauld County v. Endahl, 224 N.W. 951, 55 S.D. 73.

§ 143. - - Ultra Vires Acts

A municipality or other governmental agency is not estopped to deny the validity of an act or contract beyond its power, and this rule has been applied although the public has accepted benefits or money has been expended on the faith of such act or contract.

The doctrine of ultra vires is applied with greater strictness to public than to private corporations, and, as a rule, a municipality or other public or quasi-public corporation or agency is not estopped by an act or contract which is beyond the scope of its corporate powers,[63] especially where the party claiming the estoppel was aware of the municipal incapacity or used no diligence to ascertain whether it had the power which it assumed to exercise.[64] The operation of the rule is not affected by the fact that the contract was the result of a compromise,[65] or affected by the fact that money has been expended on the faith of the contract,[66] or by reason of a prior erroneous construction of a statute or ordinance.[67] An estoppel to deny the validity of the act of a governmental body may not be based on the very act to which the incapacity relates.[68]

The doctrine of estoppel may not be applied against a municipal corporation or similar body where the subject matter of the act or contract is illegal[69] or malum prohibitum;[70] nor may such a body be estopped to deny liability under a contract which is void.[71] A municipality may not be es-

topped by acts or contracts which violate mandatory constitutional or statutory provisions,[72] such as budget laws;[73] and the doctrine of equitable estoppel may not be applied in contravention of a mandatory provision of a statute where the action taken by the public agency is a statutory proceeding rather than a suit of equitable character.[74]

Acceptance of benefits. The rule that a governmental agency may not be estopped by acts or contracts beyond its powers has been held to be unaffected by the fact that benefits have accrued to, and have been accepted by, the public,[75] and some cases in applying the rule have made a distinction between acts and contracts which are merely ultra vires because unauthorized and those which are strictly ultra vires because wholly illegal and void as being positively prohibited by law or against public policy.[76]

The question whether the receipt of benefits will work an estoppel has been considered supra § 111 in respect of municipalities and supra § 138 in respect of the state.

§ 144. Irregular or Unauthorized Method of Exercising Power

A municipality or other governmental agency may be estopped to deny the validity of an act or contract within its power but voidable or irregular, subject to the limitation that no estoppel may arise in favor of one who knowingly participates in the irregularity; and a municipality is not estopped where the power exists but is exercised in a manner directly and clearly violating a statute or other positive law.

Although a municipality or other governmental agency cannot be estopped by its ultra vires acts, see supra § 143, there is nevertheless a broad distinction to be observed between an irregular exercise of a granted power and the total absence or want of power;[77] and the rule is that a municipality or other governmental agency may be estopped, as right and justice may require, where the act or contract relied on to create the estoppel was within its corporate powers, although the method of exercising the power was irregular or unauthorized.[78]

This rule has been applied with respect to contracts not complying with the required formalities,[79] or which are claimed not to have been authorized by ordinance,[80] especially where the contracts are within the scope of proprietary, as distinguished from governmental, powers;[81] and to contracts not void but merely voidable,[82] and to contracts not ultra vires or mala prohibita,[83] although entered into by virtue of unconstitutional statutes[84] or invalid ordinances.[85] For the purpose of avoiding liability for injuries to person or property from the construction or maintenance of streets, drains, or sewers, a municipality cannot set up that there has been a failure to comply with some regulation concerning the exercise of the power.[86] Where a municipal corporation dealing with individuals assumes powers on which the validity of its acts depends, and subsequently it develops that the specific powers relied on were not possessed, the municipality is not thereby excused from the performance of its obligations, if they can be performed through the agency of other powers which it does possess.[87]

However, an important limitation of the rule is that no estoppel can arise in favor of one who has knowingly assisted or agreed to assist the municipality in the illegal exercise of its power;[88] and it has been held that the rule will not apply where the method of the exercise of the power is not a mere irregularity but actually forbidden by statute or other positive law,[89] since this in effect brings

Informalities

(2) The granting of an oil, gas, and mineral lease by the governor pursuant to statutory authority and acceptance of payments thereunder by the register of the land office were exercises of granted power and not ultra vires acts and hence doctrine of estoppel could be invoked by lessee to preclude state from asserting invalidity of lease because two newspapers failed to comply with formality with respect to advertising the letting of bids.—State ex rel. § 145. Grants or Licenses to Use Streets

In a proper case a municipality may be estopped to use a street, to claim title therein, to question the validity of a grant or franchise, or to deny the legal existence of the street.

It has been broadly held that estoppel does not operate against the state or its political subdivisions so as to defeat the right of the public to the use of city streets,[90] or to bar the right of a city to abate unlawful encroachments thereon,[91] in the absence of inequitable conduct and resultant injustice.[92] Further, where a grant or license is void because of the entire absence of power to execute it, a municipality is not estopped by its acquiescence;[93] and a municipality's nonaction with respect to an unauthorized use of its streets does not estop it from bringing subsequent ouster proceedings.[94] It has been held that, where a railroad company occupied a street without either a parol or written license from the municipality, the fact that the municipality sits by in silence while the company expends money in constructing the road in the street does not estop the municipality;[95] nor is a city estopped to order the removal of a structure on a sidewalk permitted to be erected under an ordinance expressly providing for revocation at any time.[96]

However, in a proper case the doctrine of equitable estoppel may be invoked against a municipality with regard to its streets.[97] By its acts and conduct a municipality may be estopped to use a street,[98] or to claim title therein,[99] or to question the validity of a grant or license to use the same.[1]

Estoppel to deny existence of street. In a proper case a municipality may be estopped to deny that a way is a public street for which it is responsible.[2]

Failure to make appropriation

Fourth-class city could not be estopped by its actions from denying liability for purchase of land, where provision therefor had not been made in annual appropriation bill as required by a mandatory statute.—Salzer v. City of East Lansing, 249 N.W. 16, 263 Mich. 626.

Restrictions on methods of creating contract

Where creation of a contract in any but a specified way is prohibited, the city may not by waiver, ratification, or acts ordinarily amounting to an estoppel give vitality to the prohibited contract or become bound on principles of restitution, and, where paving contract with city was void for failure of city to comply with statute requiring publication of advertisements for bids, action based on principles of quasi contract, restitution or estoppel would not lie for reasonable value of paving done by plaintiff under the contract.—Federal Paving Corporation v. City of Wauwatosa, 286 N.W. 546, 231 Wis. 655.

Where there is a substantial but irregular compliance with restrictive statutory provisions governing municipal contracts, an estoppel may lie against the municipality to deny the validity of the contract.—Wiese & Hanly v. City of Cincinnati, 17 Ohio N.P.,N.S., 481.

Where a municipality has exercised control over a way and improved or otherwise recognized it as a public street, it will be estopped to deny that it is a street irrespective of the mode in which it was established;[3] and, where an ordinance has been passed clearly recognizing the existence of a street and providing for its widening and extension, the city may be estopped by the ordinance and acts done under it from setting up that the location is not, in fact, a street.[4]

Private easement. In a proper case a municipality may be estopped to build on municipal land which is encumbered by an easement granted by the municipality to a private party.[5]

§ 146. Acquiescence in Improvements

In a proper case a municipality may be estopped by its acquiescence in the construction of valuable improvements on its streets or other property.

In accordance with, and subject to, the rules discussed supra §§ 138–145, the doctrine of equitable estoppel may be invoked against the public, a municipality, or other public agency, where it has acquiesced in the making by one acting in good faith of such valuable and permanent improvements on its streets, alleys, or other property that it would be unjust and inequitable to allow it to assert title to the property on which the improvements were made[6] or to refuse compensation where such improvements are removed by it,[7] or to terminate a franchise purporting to be perpetual.[8] Especially may a municipality be estopped where it goes further and demands and receives from the party committing the encroachment a stipulation against

Estoppel to assert reverter to grantor

A city from which recovery was sought for personal injuries sustained because of city's failure to keep a street open, in repair, and free from nuisance, was estopped to assert that area in which street was located had reverted to its grantor because of city's failure to observe conditions in the deeds, where grantor had not asserted any claim to the property.—Craig v. Estoppel to rely on irregularity

Although proceedings by a city to vacate an alley are not strictly regular, the city is thereafter estopped to claim title to the alley against one improving it in reliance on such vacation.—Blennerhassett v. Town of Forest City, 91 N.W. 1044, 117 Iowa 680.

Highways

Cases concerning public highways may arise, of such a character and founded on such an actual and notorious abandonment of a highway by the public that justice requires assertion of an equitable estoppel against the public in favor of individuals.—Meyer v. Meldrum, 211 N.W. 658, 659, 237 Mich. 318, citing Corpus Juris—29 C.J. p 535 note 22.

Route over tideway

Where railroad route through city and over tideway was selected and approved by the common council of the city under the act of incorporation, L.1846, c 216, and where the railroad constructed tracks along such route, spent large amounts in construction and equipment, constructed large freight depots which could be reached only over such right of way, paid hundreds of thousands of dollars in taxes to the city levied on such right of way as property owned by the railroad, and continued to use the land for more than seventy years as such right of way, the city was estopped from denying the railroad's right to use land not parts of streets and avenues for such purpose.—City of New York v. New York Cent. R. Co., 190 N.Y.S. 777, 198 App.Div. 517, affirmed 136 N.E. 311, 234 N.Y. 113.

Use of streets without franchise

Municipality, permitting gas company without franchise to make expenditures and to use its streets, may be estopped to prevent maintenance of pipe line system.—Marmet Gas Co. v. Town of Marmet, 135 S.E. 839, 102 W.Va. 605.

Annexation by city of town estopped

City annexing town after corporation installed electric conduits under street with town chairman's verbal consent and at substantial expense is estopped to deny lawful presence thereof.—Milwaukee Electric Ry. & Light Co. v. City of Milwaukee, 245 N.W. 860, 209 Wis. 668.

City which required property owner to locate gutter and curb inside street line was thereby estopped from asserting that placing of gutter and curb and other improvements inside street line precluded owner's recovery of compensation for destruction of improvements when street was paved to its original lines.—City of San Angelo v. Neilon, supra.

claims for damages for the vacation of the street,[9] or where an agent of the city acting under its instructions, and with the concurrence of the party subsequently making the improvements, investigates and reports to the council of the municipality that it has no rights in the land, and such report is received and filed in the records of the city,[10] or where the municipality through its officers has fixed the boundary lines of the street and improvements have been made on the basis thereof.[11]

However, to create an estoppel against a municipality by acquiescence in improvements the essential elements of an estoppel in pais must be present.[12] No estoppel is created against a municipality in respect of an encroachment on a street by an abutting lot owner, of which it has no knowledge,[13] or by a mere casual expression of opinion by a municipal officer that there could be no objection to the encroachment.[14] There is no estoppel because part of a highway was occupied by an abutting landowner under a permit granted by the city;[15] and the fact that abutting owners improve their lots on the basis of the width to which the street was actually opened will not estop the municipality from claiming the full width of the street.[16] An estoppel may not be predicated on the use or occupation of a street or other municipal property under permission which it is contemplated may subsequently be withdrawn;[17] nor may an estoppel arise where the ele-

Consent limited as to time

Where municipality consented to use of its streets by power company for erection of poles to support wires transmitting electricity, and company and its predecessors acted with knowledge that consent was limited in time, in action by municipality to enjoin such use after expiration of franchise, municipality could not be estopped to assert the limitation.—Eastern Shore Public Service Co. v. Town of Seaford, Del., 2 A.2d 265, sustaining Town of Seaford v. Eastern Shore Public Service Co., Ch., 2 A.2d 258, and appeal dismissed Eastern Shore Public Service Co. v. Town of Seaford, 59 S.Ct. 483, 306 U.S. 616, 83 L.Ed. 1024, rehearing denied 59 S.Ct. 589, 306 U.S. 668, 83 L.Ed. 1063.

Expenditures during franchise as precluding action after expiration

Telephone company's expenditures for replacements, additions, and improvements before expiration of franchise granted it by city did not estop latter to sue for injunction in nature of ouster against further maintenance of company's poles, wires, etc., in city's streets and alleys.—City of Roswell, N. M., v. Mountain States Telephone & Telegraph Co., C.C.A.N.M., 78 F.2d 379.

Expenditures made with knowledge of facts

Where town limited its consent to use of public streets by light and power company to twenty years, but did not immediately oust the company's successor from the streets on expiration of the period, and successor subsequently, with full knowledge of the facts, spent money on plant and facilities, town was not thereby estopped from enforcing the limitation.—Town of Seaford v. Eastern Shore Public Service Co., Del.Ch., 2 A.2d 258, sustained Eastern Shore Public Service Co. v. Town of Seaford, Sup., 2 A.2d 265, appeal dismissed Eastern Shore Public Service Co. v. Town of Seaford, 59 S.Ct. 483, 306 U.S. 616, 83 L.Ed. 1024, rehearing denied 59 S.Ct. 589, 306 U.S. 668, 83 L.Ed. 1063.

Use not adverse in character

A town may, by permitting a school district to use a public square as a site for a school building, be estopped to deny the school district's right to use the land for such purpose; but in such case there must be clearly an abandonment by the town or public, and an adverse holding by the school district. The continued occupancy and use of part of a public square by a school district for school purposes for more than sixty years did not estop the town from denying the school district's right to use the public square for school purposes and to construct new building thereon, in the absence of a showing that the school district's use of the land was adverse to the claims of the public, and in view of evidence that that portion of the public square inclosed for school purposes had at the same time been used for the general purposes to which a public square might be put, and had a bandstand and a speaker's stand thereon.—Melin v. Community Consol. School Dist. No. 76, 144 N.E. 13, 312 Ill. 376.

ment of reliance is absent.[18]

Further, it is essential that the improvement should have been induced by the acts of the municipality;[19] and it has been held that a claim of irrevocable right in a street or public place cannot be predicated on the ground alone that the public officers saw improvements in course of construction and failed to object.[20] Something more than mere possession of municipal property on the part of private parties must be shown.[21] Improvements of a trivial or insignificant character cannot be made the basis of an estoppel.[22] A fortiori no estoppel can be invoked against a municipality where a lot owner who had placed gates and bars across an adjoining alley, and claimed it by adverse possession, had made no improvements thereon,[23] or where a telephone company, in violation of its franchise, installed party lines but expended no money on representations by the city that it would not enforce the provisions of the franchise.[24] The municipality will not be estopped by acquiescence in a grant, license, or ordinance expressly providing for revocation at any time by the municipality.[25]

Agreement in restraint of right to condemn property. An agreement by city authorities that, if railroad companies would erect a union depot, the city would not attempt to open streets through the premises, does not estop the city from condemning the right to extend its streets through the premises after the erection of the depot.[26]

§ 147. Collection of Taxes and Assessments

The assessment and collection of taxes ordinarily does not estop a government or governmental agency from claiming title to land; and it is only under exceptional circumstances that the government may be estopped in respect of its exercise of the power of taxation.

It is generally held that the United States[27] or a state[28] or municipality[29] is not estopped from subsequently claiming title to property for the ben-

Knowledge that permission was temporary in character

Town is not estopped to demand railroad's removal from street of tracks laid under permission of board of county commissioners before town's incorporation, since in such case the railroad knew it had nothing more than a temporary permission.—Town of Conway v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., D.C.S.C., 20 F.2d 250.

Express reservation of municipal rights

Where a city owns the fee to land under water outside of the bulkhead line, and thereafter permits an upland private owner to fill in part of the land, under a permit reserving all of the city's rights, such private owner cannot claim to have acquired title thereto against the city under the doctrine of estoppel.—Harway Improvement Co. v. Where purchasers of property in platted addition had full knowledge of existence of platted streets dedicated to use of public, the failure of public to use streets as such over period of many years while property owners set out trees and shrubs, seeded portions of streets, and buried an oil tank under street, did not estop village from subsequently claiming right to use streets, since the property owners acted with full knowledge of the facts.—Olsen v. efit of the public, by an unauthorized levy and collection of taxes on such property, or even by a levy of taxes and sale of the property for taxes.[30] The assessment or collection of taxes does not estop a municipality from claiming title to land dedicated for a street,[31] or for other public purposes.[32] The fact that one who had dedicated property for a street subsequently vacated listed the vacated property as his own but in such a way as to conceal its location, and paid taxes thereon for several years, is insufficient to establish the defense of estoppel in an action by the municipality to quiet title to the vacated portion of the street.[33] Where a claimant of lands adversely to a county and its grantees, pending litigation as to his rights, and with knowledge that he did not have the legal title, voluntarily procured the land to be assessed in his name, and paid the taxes thereon for a number of years, the acceptance of such taxes will not estop the county, nor its grantee, having knowledge of such facts, from asserting title to the lands.[34] Unauthorized assessments for public improvements will not estop the municipality from setting up a claim of title to the land against which the assessments were made.[35] A railroad may not escape performance of its statutory duties in respect of a bridge on the ground that taxes have been assessed against it or others in connection with the erection and maintenance thereof;[36] nor will the imposition of taxes on a public utility estop a municipality from later ousting it from use of the streets.[37]

However, where, in addition to the levy and collection of taxes, there appear other circumstances rendering it clearly inequitable for the government to claim title, the doctrine of estoppel may be applied.[38]

Estoppel to collect taxes. Taxation being a governmental rather than a proprietary function, ordinarily there can be no estoppel against a government or governmental agency with reference to the enforcement of taxes.[39] The government is not es-

City's grantee

Where a strip embraced in the west half of a lot was inclosed with the east half which belonged to the city, the mere fact that defendant had for twenty years paid taxes to the city on the west half including such strip was not sufficient to estop the city's grantee from claiming title by adverse possession where he and his grantors had been in the adverse occupancy of the land for more than fifty years.—Ernst v. Estoppel not to be lightly invoked

While there may be instances where the doctrine can be applied even as to tax matters, the doctrine of estoppel is not to be lightly invoked against the exercise of the sovereign power of the state to levy and collect taxes for the support of the government.—Outer Harbor Dock & Wharf Co. v. City of Los Angeles, 193 P. 137, 49 Cal.App. 120.

topped by previous acts or conduct of its agents with reference to the determination of tax liabilities,[40] and the mistakes or misinformation of its officers will not estop it from collecting taxes due.[41] There can be no estoppel in pais against the government with reference to tax matters where the essential elements of an estoppel are absent.[42] Even if all the other elements of an estoppel are present, there will be no estoppel against the government with reference to tax matters if the representations were made by an officer lacking the necessary authority.[43] Further, the state will not be bound by an estoppel in connection with tax matters on the theory of its privity with individuals who are estopped where the circumstances are not such as to support the claim of privity.[44] The violation of law by an illegal agreement as to assessment may not be made the basis of an estoppel against a school to preclude it from attacking the validity of a tax assessment.[45]

B. MATTERS PRECLUDED

§ 148. Extent of Estoppel Generally

An equitable estoppel may be asserted as a defense or for the protection of a right, and, as a general rule, is commensurate with the thing represented and operates to put the party entitled to its benefit in the same position as if the thing represented were true. It may be applied only to protect from loss, and cannot be extended beyond the natural and reasonable import of the representation.

An equitable estoppel when established by the evidence operates as effectively as estoppels by deed or record,[48] and when the facts call for its application it supersedes all other rules.[49] The effect of such an estoppel may prevent the assertion of an unequivocal right or preclude a good defense,[50] and it should not be enforced unless it is substantiated in every particular.[51] It generally may be asserted, not for the creation of a right, but as a matter of defense or for the protection of a right,[52] and, to this extent, may be asserted as a ground for affirmative relief.[53] of assessment does not estop school from contesting tax on ground property was exempt.—People ex rel. Manlius School v. Adams, 256 N.Y.S. 185, 143 Misc. 469.

Estoppel to deny capacity in which property held

Under Gen.St.1906 § 513, providing that, where property is held in trust for the purpose of taxation, the fiduciary capacity should be stated, where the state has assessed property of a decedent to trustee, which is the true capacity in which the property is held, and the state sues the trustees for the taxes, it will not be permitted to show that the property is held in a different fiduciary capacity.—State v. Beardsley, 82 So. 794, 77 Fla. 803.

Tax receipt as estopping county to deny payment

A county will be estopped from asserting that a tax has not been paid as against a purchaser who purchased the property and paid the purchase money, or a portion thereof, to seller in reliance on a receipt exhibited, signed by the county treasurer, showing payment of taxes.—Seward v. Fisken, 210 P. 378, 122 Wash. 225, 27 A.L.R. 1208.

Validity of assessment

Where city permitted power company for yearly sums to operate its cable on a bridge and took advantage of an assessment made on the right as a special franchise, under Tax Law art 1 § 2 subd 6, it is in no position to question the validity of the assessment.—New York & Queens Electric Light & Power Co. v. Delaney, 128 N.E. 131, 229 N.Y. 184, reversing In re New York & Queens Electric Light & Power Co., 179 N.Y.S. 938, 190 App.Div. 934.

Voluntary character of tax payment

A city, to which apartment house owner paid illegal tax on washtubs in apartments under protest to relieve property from lien and avoid penalty for delay in payment, is estopped to assert that payment was voluntary, in action to recover amount thereof.—Effell Realty Corporation v. City of New York, 299 N.Y.S. 373, 165 Misc. 176, affirmed 11 N.Y.S.2d 250, 256 App.Div. 972, appeal granted 12 N.Y.S.2d 362, 257 App.Div. 806, affirmed 24 N.E.2d 978, 282 N.Y. 541.

Reply to defense

Where plaintiffs brought suit to quiet title to lot, and defendants in their answer claimed fee-simple title to the lot and prayed for decree vesting title in them, plaintiffs had right to plead estoppel against defendants' claim, as against contention that "estoppel" was a weapon of defense and not of offense.—Clark v. Ferguson, Mo., 144 S.W.2d 116.

Object and purpose of equitable estoppel generally see supra § 63.

53. U.S.—Wherman v. Conklin, Iowa, 15 S.Ct. 129, 155 U.S. 314,

It cannot, in the nature of things, be subjected to fixed and settled rules of universal application like legal estoppels or limited by a technical formula, but is entitled to a fair and liberal application like other equitable doctrines that are admitted to suppress fraud and promote honesty and fair dealing.[54] As a general rule, the estoppel is commensurate with the thing represented and operates to put the party entitled to its benefit in the same position as if the thing represented was true.[55] This, however, is the absolute limit of the extent to which the estoppel can operate, for it is a fundamental part of the doctrine of equitable estoppels that the estoppel extends only so far as may be necessary to protect from loss the party entitled to assert it; he may claim indemnification but not profit;[56] and hence it should be limited to what is necessary to put the parties in the same relative position they would have occupied if the predicate of the estoppel had never existed.[57] The estoppel can neither be extended beyond nor cut below the natural and reasonable import of the representation, relied on to create it.[58] It in no case extends beyond the act done or omitted in reliance on the conduct or representation of the party sought to be estopped,[59] and goes no further than to preserve the transaction already entered on.[60] However, the fact that defendant claims a larger estoppel against plaintiff than the court will allow does not prevent defendant receiving such benefit from his claim of estoppel as the case warrants.[61]

Estoppel, ordinarily, cannot be applied to impair the force and effect of a prohibitory law,[62] such as to make good an act forbidden by law;[63] nor can it be applied to deny the existence of a law,[64] or to defend or uphold crime or fraud, or misdoing of any character.[65]

from insisting on a personal right or privilege to which he otherwise would be entitled,[66] such as from insisting on protection as to a right or privilege given him by a statute enacted for his benefit;[67] but it cannot be applied as to a right given him not alone for his private benefit, but as a matter of public policy in the state's interest.[68]

§ 150. Title or Claim to Property

Estoppel as to the title or right to property is coextensive with, and limited by, the scope of the acts or conduct relied on to create the estoppel. By some decisions title to real property may be divested by estoppel, but there are decisions to the contrary.

Estoppel may be applied to the title to, or rights or interests in, real or personal property.[69] A person may by his acts or conduct preclude himself, on clear and satisfactory grounds of justice and equity, from asserting his title to or interest in land,[70] or from asserting a different title than an instrument purports to convey,[71] or from asserting that the title conveyed is defective,[72] or from denying another's right to the use of the property.[73]

An estoppel affecting the title or right to property is coextensive with, and limited by, the scope of the act or conduct relied on as creating it.[74] Estoppel in pais usually operates only on existing rights and does not apply to an after-acquired right or title;[75] it operates on a right or title which is voidable or defeasible, and not on one which is void.[76] It also does not apply to a right or title derived in another and different manner than that as to which the representation is made;[77] but where a person induces another to purchase property by asserting that it is free from encumbrance, it has been held that he will be estopped afterward to claim under a mortgage or judgment lien existing at the time but subsequently purchased.[78]

Whether title to land divested by estoppel. There is considerable diversity of statement as to whether title to land can be divested by an estoppel in pais, some decisions declaring broadly that it can be so divested or transferred,[79] although the whole trans-

Caution in applying rule

"The doctrine of estoppel, when action may rest in parol,[80] and that the statute of frauds is not available as a defense.[81] On the other hand, other decisions hold that title to realty cannot be divested or conveyed by estoppel.[82] However, it has been well said that whether, in strictness of speech, a title may be "created" by estoppel is a refinement of no value in the light of modern equity jurisprudence,[83] for, although the title does not pass, a conveyance will be decreed by a court of equity[84] in accordance with the maxim that equity considers that done which should have been done.[85]

§ 151. Rights and Liabilities under Contract

Equitable estoppel may apply to preclude the assertion of rights and liabilities under a contract.

Where the facts of the case clearly justify it, the doctrine of equitable estoppel will apply to preclude the assertion of rights and liabilities under a contract,[86] application of the estoppel, in a particular case, being coextensive with, and limited by, the scope of the representation relied on to create it.[87] Such estoppel, however, cannot be applied where invoked for the purpose of working a change in the title to land, is to be applied with great caution."—Lyon v. Morgan, 38 N.E. 960, 143 N.Y. 505, 509—21 C.J. p 1201 note 4 [b].

Property which may be acquired by eminent domain may be acquired for the same public use by the application of the doctrine of equitable estoppel.—Union Pac. R. Co. v. Greeley, Colo., 189 F. 1, 110 C.C.A. 571.

As not creating technical title

An "estoppel in pais" does not create a technical title in land. Its effect is to conclude a party from denying the effect of his statements or admissions designed to influence, and which have influenced, the conduct of another, and, when so applied, it is as effectual as a deed would be from the party estopped. —Nissen v. McCafferty, 195 N.Y.S. 549, 202 App.Div. 528.

21 C.J. p 1201 note 5.

This last view is perhaps sustained by the numerous decisions which, as elsewhere shown, hold that title to land cannot be affected in an action at law by an estoppel in pais, see supra § 64.

Rule does not apply where estoppel serves to defend and not to destroy the apparent paper title.—Stone v. Culver, 282 N.W. 142, 286 Mich. 263, 119 A.L.R. 512.

As between legatee and executor

While in a contest between plaintiffs, claiming as legatees under a will, and the executor, the executor might be estopped from setting up title against them, such estoppel would not authorize plaintiffs to assert title under allegations and proof that a deed from testator to his wife had been delivered and accepted by her, and showed no title in testator, since estoppel can convey no title.—Bussey v. Bussey, 121 S.E. 821, 157 Ga. 648.

Mere silence or inaction will not cause a loss of title to property by estoppel.—Snelling v. Adair, 199 So. 782, 196 La. 624—Nielson v. Haas, App., 192 So. 716.

Elements of estoppel

To estop defendant from relying on real meaning of contract, plaintiff must have been misled by defendant, and thereby induced to sign contract to his prejudice by some clear and positive misrepresentation with respect to its real meaning before he executed it.—Colvocoresses v. W. S. Wasserman Co., Del., 190 A. 607, 8 W.W.Harr. 253.

Plaintiff suing on contract, after answer of non est factum, need not show that contract was executed, but could rely on estoppel.—Seymour Improvement Co. v. Viking Sprinkler Co., 161 N.E. 389, 87 Ind.App. 179.

Statute requiring written contract or executed oral contract to change written contract does not prevent equitable estoppel of party to demand literal compliance with contract.—Walker Valley Oil & Gas Co. v. Parks & Palmer, 262 P. 672, 128 Okl. 286.

Estoppel based on instrument, but without fraudulent connivance, should not be enforced beyond extent necessary to make good loss suffered through acts which form basis of estoppel.—Camerer v. California the party claiming the estoppel changed his position before the representation was made by the other;[88] nor is it applicable to give validity to an illegal contract,[89] to question the validity of a contract where the question involved is the effectuation of the state's public policy,[90] or to enforce in an action at law a parol change in an executory contract under seal.[91] A statute authorizing proof of failure of consideration for a written contract does not apply where the doctrine of estoppel comes into play.[92]

§ 152. Remedies

Estoppel does not extend to matters affecting the remedy only disconnected from the subject matter of the action.

The doctrine of estoppel does not extend to matters affecting the remedy only, which are foreign to, and disconnected from, the contract or the character in which the parties entered into it;[93] and when applied it should be only to the extent of protecting the party who has been misled against the loss actually occasioned thereby.[94] A party's admission of the priority of a lien does not estop him from relying on and asserting defenses arising subsequent thereto.[95] and this has been the rule in some states which have adopted the code system of pleading,[97] while in the state where this system originated the rule has been that an equitable estoppel ordinarily may be made available either by a plea in bar or it may be used as evidence on the trial.[98]

However, in other states where code pleading prevails, and in a few where it does not but in which the matter is regulated by special statutes, subject to certain exceptions discussed in subdivision b of this section, it is necessary to plead estoppels in pais specially,[99] provided there is opportunity to do

(3) In equity cases an estoppel in pais must be pleaded, where it constitutes the basis of a right to sue and ground of relief, or is relied on as a defense.—Goldberg v. Cities Service Oil Co., 266 N.W. 321, 275 Mich. 199.

payment,[4] or of accord and satisfaction.[5]

Estoppel by deed or record. While there is some authority to the contrary,[6] ordinarily, where there is opportunity to do so, an estoppel by deed must be specially pleaded to be availed of;[7] and this is also the rule in respect of estoppels by record.[8]

Estoppel as cause of action or in avoidance of defense. When necessary to plead an estoppel, the rule applies with equal force whether, as observed supra in this section, the estoppel is relied on as a defense, or as an element of a cause of action.[9] Where estoppel is relied on in avoidance of a defense, it must be set up in the replication or reply,[10] except, as is observed in subdivision b (2) of this section, in jurisdictions where replications or replies are not permitted.

What law governs. Under the general rule stated in Conflict of Laws § 22, the law of the forum governs as to the necessity of pleading estoppel.[11]

Waiver. Subject to exceptions noted in subdivision b of this section, according to the decisions waiver must be specially pleaded,[12] whether relied on as a defense,[13] as an element of the cause of action,[14] or in avoidance of a defense.[15]

If the waiver in question arises by reason of an estoppel, to be taken advantage of, it must be pleaded under the principle that, if there is an opportunity to plead an estoppel, it must be pleaded;[16] but, where the waiver contains no element of estoppel, and is not asserted against an opposing litigant, it has been stated that there is no rule of law requiring that it shall be pleaded.[17]

b. Exceptions to Rule

Wis.—Lawton v. Racine, 119 N.W. 331, 137 Wis. 593.

Actions of trover
The general rule does not apply to actions of trover, for the reason that conversion, which is the gist of the action, is ex vi termini, a tortious act, which cannot in law be justified or excused, and any plea alleging matters of justification or excuse other than a release, is equivalent to the plea of not guilty, since it involves a denial of the conversion.—Barksdale v. Strickland & Hazard, 124 So. 234, 237, 220 Ala. 86.

Actions of replevin
In replevin actions, waiver and estoppel may be proved under the general denial without pleading them specially.—Helms v. American Sec. Co. of Indiana, 22 N.E.2d 822, 216 Ind. 1.

An estoppel which is part of the title may be given in evidence although not pleaded;[19] and the failure to plead estoppel is waived by proceeding with the trial of the case without objection.[20] Where on the trial of a claim case a special issue of forgery is formed on the execution of a deed, and this issue is found in favor of claimant, who was the alleged maker of the deed, the adverse party may, even after verdict that the deed was a forgery, broaden the issue formed on the claim case and plead and prove an estoppel in pais arising from representations made by the alleged grantor.[21]

Statutory exceptions. In some jurisdictions certain exceptions to the rule requiring an estoppel to be specially pleaded have been made by statute.[22] Thus, under particular statutes, it is not necessary to plead estoppel specially in actions of ejectment,[23] of trespass to try title,[24] of replevin,[25] or in suits to quiet title.[26]

(2) Want of Opportunity to Plead

Want of opportunity dispenses with the necessity of pleading estoppel specially.

Whatever may be the character of the estoppel, whether in pais, by record, or by deed, a party does not waive the estoppel where he has no opportunity to plead it.[27] This rule applies with equal force wheth-

Estoppel of purchaser to deny validity of contract of purchase might be taken advantage of without plea. —Richardson v. Short, 207 N.W. 610, 201 Iowa 561, modifying 202 N.W. 836.

Representations contained in pleadings

Defendant, on motion to vacate judgment, need not formally plead estoppel arising from representations contained in pleadings.—Underwood v. Greenlees, 291 P. 777, 131 Kan. 308

Consideration of parties' conduct in equity

Equity must consider conduct of parties, even though estoppel is not specially pleaded.—Dreyfuss Dry Goods Co. v. Lines, D.C.La., 18 F.2d 611, reversed on other grounds, C.C. A., 24 F.2d 29.

19. Or.—McCleery v. Woodmen of the World, 297 P. 345, 348, 136 Or. 407, citing Corpus Juris, and rehearing denied 299 P. 1004, 136 Or. 407.
21 C J. p 1246 note 29.

Estoppel of licensee to dispute licensor's title

Landowners suing to enjoin landing of a ferry on their premises after termination of parol license were not required to plead estoppel of the licensee to dispute their title while continuing in exercise of the privilege.—Bryant v. West, Mo., 219 S.W. 355.

Title subsequently acquired by vendor

A subsequently acquired title inuring to the vendee by estoppel, see supra §§ 21–35, being a part of the title, may be given in evidence without being specially pleaded.—Willis v. Willis, 166 S.E. 398, 203 N C. 517—Meyer v. Thompson, 112 S E. 328, 183 N.C. 543—Farmers' Bank v. Glenn, 68 N.C. 35.

22. Ind.—McConnell v. American Nat. Bank, 103 N.E. 809, 59 Ind. App. 319.
21 C J. p 1245 note 17 [a].

Interpleader

Under Act May 26, 1897, P.L p 95, regulating procedure in actions of interpleader, the character of the pleadings is defined, and there is nothing therein requiring special pleadings to raise question of estoppel.—Speer v. Zeuger, 83 Pa.Super. 288.

23. N.C.—Keen v. Parker, 8 S.E.2d 209, 217 N.C. 378.

24. Plea of not guilty sufficient

Under a statute providing that under a plea of not guilty defendants in trespass to try title may give evidence of any lawful defense except limitations, it has very generally been held that defendants may, under that plea, prove equitable estoppel; but a later decision of the supreme court reaches the opposite conclusion without noticing the earlier decisions.—Reed v. Robertson, 156 S.W. 196, 106 Tex. 56—Texas Pacific Coal & Oil Co. v. Fox, Tex. Civ.App., 228 S.W. 1021—Rio Bravo Oil Co. v. Sanford, Tex.Civ.App., 217 S.W. 219, dismissed for want of jurisdiction—Village Mills Co. v. Houston Oil Co. of Texas, Tex.Civ.App., 186 S.W. 785, reversed on other grounds Houston Oil Co. of Texas v. Village Mills Co., Com.App., 241 S.W. 122—21 C.J. p 1245 note 17 [b] (2).

Pleading by plaintiff

(1) The customary allegations in trespass to try title are sufficient to authorize proof of any fact tending to establish plaintiff's title, and where recovery is sought on theory of estoppel it is not necessary to specially plead the facts of estoppel.—Franklin v. Smith, Tex.Civ. App., 265 S.W. 715.

(2) However, it has been indicated that an estoppel in avoidance of a defense should be specially pleaded by plaintiff.—Reed v. Robertson, 156 S.W. 196, 106 Tex. 56.

Party without knowledge

Where the party is without knowledge that his claim must ultimately rest on an estoppel the estoppel need not be pleaded.—Pacific Finance Corporation v. Hendley, 284 P. 736, 103 Cal.App. 335, hearing denied and modified on other grounds, 285 P. 1048—Resetar v. Leonardi, 216 P. 71, 61 Cal.App. 765—Guy v. Leech, 190 P. 1067, 47 Cal.App. 704.

Claim of estoppel secondary

er the estoppel is relied on as a defense,[28] or as an element of a cause of action;[29] and where there was no opportunity to plead an estoppel, it may be shown in evidence without having pleaded it.[30] However, it has been held that the rule that, when a cause is tried on the assumption that new matter in the answer has been put in issue by a reply, the want of a reply cannot be urged in the appellate court is not broad enough to excuse plaintiff's failure to plead estoppel.[31]

Where replication or reply not permitted. Under systems of pleading which permit no replication or reply, the rule, stated in subdivision a of this section, requiring estoppels to be pleaded in avoidance of a defense, has no application, and if plaintiff claims an estoppel against the defense set up in the answer, he is entitled to give evidence concerning it without special pleading.[32] The remedy of defendant if taken by surprise, it is said, is to ask for a postponement.[33]

(3) Estoppel Shown by Pleadings or Evidence

An estoppel ordinarily need not be specially pleaded where the matter constituting the estoppel is apparent on the face of the pleadings or where the estoppel is shown in evidence.

If the matter constituting an estoppel is apparent on the face of the pleadings it need not be specially pleaded to be available,[34] and, as is shown infra § 154, the estoppel usually is available on demurrer.

on the original claim of ownership of the property in question and on her contention that the person through whom defendant acquired title to said property had no authority from her to dispose of the same, defendant is not required in his pleadings to anticipate such other contentions as plaintiff may seek to rely on when her main reliance for her right of recovery has failed her, and which do not appear on the face of her complaint. In such cases, defendant may await the assertion by plaintiff in her proof of such additional foundation for her right of recovery and may then oppose the same with his evidence of an equitable estoppel.—Kenny v. Christianson, 253 P. 715, 200 Cal. 419, 50 A.L.R. 1297—Bush v. Rogers, App., 109 P.2d 379—California Standard Finance Corporation v. Riverside Finance Co., 295 P. 555, 111 Cal. App. 151.

Allegation of tender in complaint

Relative to validity of tax sale, allegation of tender in complaint did not excuse plea of estoppel by defendant.—E. McIlhenny's Sons v. Couvillon, 2 La.App. 734.

Estoppel shown by evidence. It has been held in some jurisdictions that an estoppel or waiver which is not specially pleaded is not available, even though established by the evidence.[35]

In other jurisdictions estoppel if established by the evidence, is available although it has not been pleaded.[36] The failure to object to evidence of estoppel waives the objection that the estoppel was not specially pleaded.[37] Further, where the facts showing estoppel or waiver are in issue and are admissible for any purpose under the pleadings, estoppel is available as a defense without being specially pleaded,[38] and evidence of estoppel is admissible without being pleaded in order to rebut evidence introduced by the opposite party.[39] An estoppel or waiver need not be pleaded where it appears in the case made by the party against whom it is invoked.[40] An estoppel against plaintiff is available to defendant, although not pleaded, where it is established by plaintiff's evidence;[41] and plaintiff may urge an

Affidavit of truth of facts

Where the basis of a plea of estoppel is facts which appeared in the pleading previously filed, an affidavit of the truth of the facts alleged is not necessary.—Martin v. Iverson, 5 La.App. 525.

In Georgia

(1) Judgment based on estoppel not specially pleaded could not be rendered, although evidence admitted without objection showed estoppel.—Hightower v. Blakely Hard Wood Lumber Co., 137 S.E. 22, 163 Ga. 776.

(2) While estoppel when relied on must generally be specially pleaded, the issue may be made by evidence admitted without objection, although there was no plea of estoppel.—Fletcher v. Reaves, 110 S.E. 510, 28 Ga. App. 205.

(3) In payee's suit on note, defendant surety was entitled to benefit of his testimony as to an estoppel irrespective of failure to plead an estoppel, where only objection thereto did not identify particular portion of testimony attacked and did not attack testimony on ground that it was unauthorized by pleadings.—Franklin Savings & Loan Co. v. Branan, 188 S.E. 67, 54 Ga.App. 363.

Discussion in opening, in evidence, and in findings

Where estoppel was discussed in opening discussion of case and in testimony that followed and was in effect carried into findings, it became issue as effectively as though it had been pleaded.—Beckjord v. Traeger, 39 P.2d 523, 3 Cal.App.2d 385, rehearing denied 41 P.2d 172, 3 Cal.App.2d 385.

Where pleadings and evidence show estoppel

An estoppel may be relied on as a defense, although not pleaded, where the facts pleaded and in evidence show an estoppel to arise.—Baxter v. Village of Manchester, 28 N.E.2d 672, 64 Ohio App. 220—I. J. Goldstein Co. v. Mitchell, 14 Ohio App. 231.

Rebutting testimony produced to show estoppel

Where, in a suit in equity, testimony of facts which it is claimed raise an estoppel against one party is introduced without objection, and contentious testimony disputing such facts is produced on the other side, the contention for an estoppel may be made at the hearing without having been pleaded—James v. Nelson, C.C.A.Alaska, 90 F.2d 910, 920, citing Corpus Juris—Standard Sanitary Mfg. Co. v. Arrott, Pa., 135 F. 750, 68 C.C.A. 388.

estoppel established by defendant's evidence,[42] especially where defendant offers the evidence without in any respect restricting it to any particular issue,[43] unless defendant's evidence was not presented voluntarily but was elicited when he was called for cross-examination under statute.[44]

c. Effect of Failure to Plead Estoppel

An estoppel ordinarily is waived by failure to plead it.

Unless the case falls within some of the exceptions discussed in subdivision b of this section, the failure to plead an estoppel operates as a waiver of it.[45] Where a party pleads a fact which he might be estopped to plead and the other party takes issue on the fact instead of relying on the estoppel, and the jury find the fact to be true, judgment will be rendered without regard to the estoppel.[46]

§ 154. Demurrer Raising Defense

Where the facts constituting an estoppel appear in the previous pleading, the estoppel ordinarily may be raised by demurrer.

Where facts sufficient to constitute an estoppel appear on the face of the previous pleading, the estoppel need not be specially pleaded, see supra § 153 b (3), but, may be taken advantage of on demurrer,[47] and it has been held that where a party fails to take advantage of it in such manner, he will be held to have waived the estoppel.[48]

On the other hand, if the facts constituting the estoppel are not apparent on the face of the pleading, a demurrer is not available,[49] but the estoppel must be pleaded by way of answer or plea;[50] and in some jurisdictions it appears that an estoppel or waiver must be raised by plea or answer and may not be taken advantage of on demurrer.[51]

§ 155. Nature and Form of Plea

A plea of estoppel denies the right of a party to insist on particular facts, and at common law the plea should have a formal commencement and conclusion.

The issue which a plea of estoppel presents is not to determine the truth or validity of the particular facts pleaded, but the right and power of the party to insist on them.[52]

A plea of estoppel is not a plea of confession and

Waiver

A complaint in action to set aside an arbitration award was not demurrable because plaintiff allegedly waived a portion of its alleged equitable grounds for relief, since waiver must be asserted by way of defense.—Twin Lakes Reservoir & Canal Co. v. Platt Rogers, Inc., Colo., 94 P.2d 1090.

avoidance,[53] although it has been stated that it is in the nature of such a plea[54] While the plea is spoken of as a plea in bar,[55] it is not technically such, although, like a plea in bar, it denies the right of action or defense, by denying the right to assert the facts.[56] So the rule that the pleader, if he does not demur, must either traverse or confess and avoid all of the material allegations to which he makes answer, has no application to pleadings in estoppel which are considered to be an exception to the rule.[57]

Form of plea. A plea of estoppel at common law should have a formal commencement and conclusion to mark its special character.[58] It should contain a claim that plaintiff should not be admitted to make use of what the supposed estoppel would exclude;[59] and in its conclusion such a plea, to be efficacious, must rely on the estoppel.[60] At common law a defect in these particulars may be reached by general demurrer.[61]

§ 156. Requisites and Sufficiency of Allegations

The essential facts constituting estoppel or waiver must be pleaded, but it is not necessary that estoppel or waiver be specifically designated as such in the pleading.

When it is necessary to plead an estoppel, see supra § 153, the allegations must be sufficient.[62] Es-

Where estoppel is relied on in pleadings, they must meet and remove by anticipation every possible answer of the other party.—Colvocoresses v. W. S. Wasserman Co., 190 A. 607, 8 W.W.Harr., Del., 253.

Strict construction
For the reason that a plea of estoppel forbids party against whom it is invoked from even averring the truth, pleadings of estoppel are strictly construed.—Wallace v. American Life Ins. Co. of Des Moines, Iowa, 237 P. 974, 116 Or. 195.

toppel must be pleaded with particularity and precision, every essential fact being set forth,[63] for nothing can be supplied by inference or intendment;[64] and, indeed, it has been stated that where there is ground for inference or intendment, it will be against and not in favor of the estoppel.[65] The pleading must be certain in every particular,[66] and to every intent,[67] or no estoppel can be adjudged.[68]

Nevertheless, it is a rule of general application that if the allegations amount to an estoppel it is sufficient, although the estoppel is not pleaded in so many words, or specifically designated as such,[69]

Plea referred to merits

Plea of estoppel in suit to annul partition judgment because plaintiffs knew of sale and verified answer of attorney alleged to be unauthorized is properly referred to merits.—Green v. Barnett, 120 So. 666, 10 La.App. 212.

Buyer's cause of action for seller's representations inducing purchase of stock in Massachusetts trust is independent, and not derived through trust.—Winchester-Simmons Co. v. Simmons, 227 N.Y.S. 408, 222 App.Div. 639.

When estoppel sufficiently pleaded

(1) Estoppel is sufficiently pleaded if main facts on which estoppel rests are set forth, informing opposite party of its nature.—Burrow v. Carley, 290 P. 577, 210 Cal. 95.

(2) An estoppel is sufficiently pleaded where the pleadings show that the party intends to rely on it if facts alleged by the other party, and denied for want of knowledge, are shown.—Schurtz v. Colvin, 45 N.E. 527, 55 Ohio St. 274.

Reference to evidential sources

An attempted plea of estoppel, which does not state the facts on which the pleader bases the plea, but merely refers to sources from which evidence might be adduced to support the plea, is defective.—Wallace v. American Life Ins. Co. of Des Moines, Iowa, 237 P. 974, 116 Or. 195.

Conclusions

(1) Pleading mere conclusion, without stating facts, is insufficient as pleading of estoppel.—Federal Land Bank of Omaha, Neb., v. Sherburne, 239 N.W. 778, 213 Iowa 612, followed in 239 N.W. 784, 213 Iowa 612.

(2) Allegations that plaintiff "permitted" her husband to use and control her property and claim its ownership, and "by her acts, conduct, and representations held him out to the public" as owner, when no "act" or "conduct" or "representation" was stated, nor that she knew of any representations, or was present when they were made, or was ever in a position where she was required to disclose her ownership, alleges only conclusions, and does not disclose an estoppel against plaintiff.—Teagar v. First Nat. Bank, 199 N.W. 250, 198 Iowa 107.

especially where no objection is made to the form of the pleading.[70] Mere informality in the pleading will not deprive the pleader of the benefit of the estoppel as long as the facts are sufficiently pleaded.[71]

Particular averments held necessary. In order to plead an equitable estoppel successfully, it is necessary to allege that the acts and representations or conduct constituting the alleged estoppel were done or made with intent that the person pleading the estoppel should act thereon;[72] that the representation was false, if a representation is the basis of the alleged estoppel;[73] that the party against whom the estoppel is claimed was aware of the actual state of facts misrepresented or concealed,[74] or that his conduct was characterized by gross negligence;[75] that the party setting up the estoppel was without knowledge or without convenient and available means of acquiring knowledge of the matters alleged in estoppel;[76] that the party against whom the estoppel is claimed was in a position or relation to the parties which required him to speak or act if the party claiming the estoppel relies on an estoppel arising from silence or acquiescence;[77] that the party claiming the estoppel was misled by the misrepresentations or conduct of the party against whom the estoppel is claimed,[78] and has changed his status or done or omitted to do something because of such representation or conduct;[79] and that unless the estoppel is sustained, the party setting it up will sustain material injury.[80]

If an estoppel by contract is relied on, see supra §§ 55–58, its terms should be set out.[81]

If an estoppel by a writing is invoked, the original or a copy thereof should be annexed.[82]

If an estoppel by deed is invoked, see supra §§ 10–54, the form of pleading is to rely on the deed as an estoppel, and pray judgment that the party be estopped, or not admitted to deny the facts in the deed, without demanding judgment, si actio, etc.[83] In order to estop one by deed to land, usually it should be alleged and proved that there was a consideration paid the grantor therein for the land, and this must be done, independent of the recitals contained in the deed of the payment of the consideration.[84]

If an estoppel by record is relied on, see supra §§ 4–9, it must be alleged that the facts necessary to create an estoppel of this character appear by the record[85] and that the determination was coram judice.[86]

Waiver. The facts constituting waiver must be alleged.[87] However, if the facts constituting waiver are alleged, it is sufficient, although the waiver is not specifically designated as such.[88]

§ 157. Reply or Demurrer to Pleading Setting Up Estoppel

Where replications are permitted, plaintiff may in his reply set up matter in avoidance of defendant's plea of estoppel.

If defendant pleads facts sufficient to constitute an estoppel, plaintiff may, by replication or reply, set up matter in avoidance of the estoppel.[89] However, in jurisdictions where the practice requires no reply to a defense of this character, the defense will be taken to be denied by operation of law.[90]

Recitals in bond

(1) A recital in a bond is a solemn admission by the obligor of the truth of the things recited; and hence, when in an action against him the bond is pleaded in hæc verba, the effect is the same as if there was a formal plea of estoppel. —State v. Williams, 77 Mo. 463.

demurrer to the answer will not be sustained.[91] Where the evidence fails to support plaintiff's plea of estoppel, plaintiff may not take advantage of the failure of an intervener to assail the plea by motion or demurrer.[92]

§ 158. Effect of Pleading Unsuccessfully

It has been asserted that if the plea of estoppel fails judgment follows against defendant filing the plea.

Although it has been held that a plea of estoppel admits the cause of action, and that therefore, if the estoppel fails, judgment follows against defendant,[93] it would seem that a party who has been unsuccessful in pleading an estoppel is not afterward precluded from confessing and avoiding, or traversing the allegations of his adversary, for, as is explained supra § 155, the issue presented by the estoppel is not to determine the truth or validity of the particular facts pleaded, but the right and power of the party to insist on them as a defense.

§ 159. Issues, Proof, and Variance

Estoppel and waiver ordinarily must be proved by the party who asserts them.

General rules as to issues, proof, and variance ordinarily apply as to estoppel.[94]

As is explained in § 153 supra, with certain exceptions, estoppel ordinarily must be specially pleaded in order to be available, and when it is relied on as a defense, evidence thereof usually is inadmissible under the general issue or general denial. Not only must estoppel ordinarily be specially pleaded, but it must be proved by the party asserting it.[95] To sustain the issue the evidence must prove the very facts on which the alleged estoppel is based; the estoppel pleaded cannot be supported by evidence tending to show another and different estoppel,[96] or evidence of a different cause of action or defense.[97] It has been stated, however, that notwithstanding the general rule that an estoppel must ordinarily be pleaded, a contract by estoppel may perhaps be proved under a general allegation that the contract was actually made.[98]

Waiver. Waiver must ordinarily be specially pleaded, see supra § 153, and proved by the party asserting it.[99] The intention of the party to waive

Must be found or given in evidence

Before any of the consequences of an estoppel can be claimed the facts constituting it must be found or given in evidence, and it is error for the court to assume in the progress of the trial, for the purpose of deciding on the admissibility of evidence, that an estoppel will be found by the jury.—Lackman v. Wood, 25 Cal. 147.

Insolvency of third person

To estop mortgagee from selling lot in satisfaction of claimed balance of indebtedness, mortgagor's grantee was not required to show that mortgagor, who conveyed lot by full warranty deed, was insolvent when grantee first learned that mortgagee was claiming sum in excess of amount which grantee paid on inquiry, or at time of trial.—McLendon v. Federal Mortg. Co., Tex.Civ.App., 60 S.W.2d 324, error refused.

Title by estoppel

To establish title by estoppel, the evidence must show all necessary elements of estoppel.—Roberts v. Bookout, 139 So. 175, 162 Miss. 676.

Evidence admissible under plea

(1) Under an allegation that plaintiff had full knowledge of a certain contract, and was thereby estopped to assert a claim in opposition thereto, defendant may prove either direct notice to plaintiff or facts from which knowledge may be inferred.—DeLay v. Carney Bros., 69 N.W. 1053, 100 Iowa 687.

(2) Where widow was appointed executrix under her husband's will and her final report recited that by the will she was given use of property of the estate, and that she held such property as widow under terms of the will, testimony showing acceptance of provisions of the will was admissible under plea of estoppel.—Anderson v. a right or privilege must be proved,[1] and, in addition, the evidence must show knowledge, at the time the waiver is claimed to have occurred, of all of the material facts that would probably have influenced the conduct of the party.[2]

Where so provided by statute, a variance between the pleadings and proof is deemed material only when it misleads the adverse party to his prejudice in maintaining his action or defense on the merits.[3]

B. EVIDENCE

§ 160. Presumptions and Burden of Proof

The burden of proving an estoppel or waiver is on the party asserting it.

Estoppel ordinarily is regarded as affirmative matter,[4] and under the rule that he has the burden of proof who has the affirmative of the issue, a party who alleges, see supra §§ 153, 156, and relies on an estoppel has the burden to establish all of the facts necessary to constitute it,[5] whether the estoppel is

Presumption of honesty

Where act relied on as constituting estoppel is equally capable of honest or dishonest interpretation, court must consider that party acted honestly.—Smith v. Vara, 241 N.Y.S. 202, 136 Misc. 500.

Execution levy as assertion of defendant's ownership

The law will not presume that plaintiff in fieri facias, in seeking to enforce his judgment by the mere fact of causing whatever title or pretense of title defendant in fieri facias had to be sold, has deluded or defrauded defendant into the belief that he has an estate in the property which would allow his homestead exemption to operate on it even though he failed and refused to exercise his right to redeem the legal title.—Garmon v. Davis, 12 S.E.2d 209, 63 Ga.App. 815.

Knowledge of extent of powers of governmental agency

One injured by defective condition of a bridge, previously maintained, by county road directors, in another state, is presumed to have known that the directors exceeded their powers in appropriating money to maintain such bridge, precluding estoppel against them.—Valentine v. Road Directors of Allegany County, 126 A. 147, 146 Md. 199.

Mortgage as affecting price of property

As respects estoppel, a purchaser of mortgaged land from bankruptcy trustee of owner of land would be presumed to have paid a higher price for the land if the purchaser and the trustee had not taken into consideration the mortgage, where purchaser acknowledged that land was subject to mortgage—Meridian Fertilizer Factory v. Collier, 192 So. 358, 193 La. 815.

Reliance on abstract of title

It must be presumed that lender, asking nothing more than abstract of title, furnished with application for loan secured by trust deeds, relied on such showing of borrower's title.—Crismond v. Kendrick, 29 S.W.2d 1100, 325 Mo. 619.

Reliance on insurer's date of expiration of extended insurance

Where life insurance company indorsed on lapsed policy statement that insurance was continued in force as paid-up insurance for stated length of time, but mistake was made as to length of time of extension, there was no presumption that insured or beneficiary relied thereon to their injury, which, in absence of other evidence, would show acts or failure to act in reliance on such indorsement, estopping company from setting up such mistake in action on policy.—Kimball v. faith and in ignorance of the real facts,[13] and that in consequence thereof he will be prejudiced unless the estoppel is allowed.[14]

Waiver. In the absence of evidence clearly tending to establish waiver, it will not be presumed or implied contrary to the intention of parties whose rights would be injuriously affected.[15] A presumption of waiver cannot rest on a presumption that the right alleged to have been waived was known.[16]

The burden of proving waiver is on the party alleging and relying on it.[17]

§ 161. Admissibility

General rules governing the admissibility of evidence ordinarily apply to the admissibility of evidence to prove or disprove an estoppel.

On an issue of estoppel any evidence is admissible which tends to prove or rebut any of the facts essential to the establishment of the estoppel alleged.[18]

On the other hand, where the evidence offered contravenes the general rules of competency or rele-

Evidence to be weighed with care

Jury, lower court, and appellate court should weigh with great care evidence offered to support plea of equitable estoppel, and if testimony comes from suspicious source, verdict in favor of estoppel should be set aside.—Lohmann v. Hooper, Tex. Civ.App., 87 S.W.2d 803.

Declarations as to ownership of property

Declarations of possessor of property that he is owner, made out of real owner's presence, have no probative force on issue of estoppel.—Yonkman v. Harvey, 271 P. 839, 133 Okl. 252.

Documentary evidence of inconsistent claims

Documentary evidence of previous inconsistent claims made by plaintiff concerning claim sued on, although admissible, is not conclusive and is insufficient, unless it is shown that claims are clearly inconsistent, that prior claim was successfully maintained in former action involving same parties and questions in which a final judgment was rendered, that defendant has been misled, and that it would be unjust to permit plaintiff to change position.—Colvert Ice Cream & Dairy Products Co. v. Citrus Products Co., 65 P.2d 455, 179 Okl. 285.

Prima facie case

In action on a guaranty by wholesaler against retailer's father, a prima facie case of estoppel by silence was made out by evidence that retailer proffered a guaranty purportedly signed by his father as a basis for credit, that wholesaler received the guaranty and notified the father and advised him that credit the evidence.[22] Where the evidence is evenly balanced, the burden of proof, see supra § 160, is not sustained.[23]

Estoppels cannot be based on mere conjecture;[24] and facts alleged to constitute them will not be taken by argument, inference, or intendment.[25] However, reliance on the representations of another need not be proved by direct evidence, but may be inferred from circumstances.[26] The intention that another should act on a representation or concealment may also be inferred from circumstances.[27]

In various cases, the evidence has been held to be sufficient[28] or insufficient,[29] and in various cases the

would be extended on it, and the father did not denounce his signature on the guaranty as forged, but remained silent, and credit was extended—Ware Rubber Co. v. Sewell, 91 P.2d 667, 185 Okl. 283.

Proof that lienholder claimed estoppel to assert lien was present at auction sale is not proof that he heard announcement that land was unencumbered.—Shaw v. Farmers' Bank & Trust Co., 31 S.W.2d 893, 235 Ky. 502.

Estoppel against disinterment of body

Evidence of widow's acquiescence in burial of deceased husband's body in cemetery lot of husband's parents is insufficient to establish estoppel against her attempt to disinter body for reinterment in another cemetery.—Brake v. Mother of God's Cemetery, 65 S.W.2d 739, 251 Ky. 667.

b. Waiver

Waiver must be clearly and satisfactorily proved.

The elements necessary to constitute a waiver must be clearly and satisfactorily proved.[31] It must be established by evidence that does not leave the matter doubtful or uncertain;[32] but, as in other civil actions, this need be no more than a preponderance of the evidence.[33] Waiver will not be implied from slight circumstances,[34] and is not to be lightly inferred in the face of a clearly expressed intention to insist on the right alleged to have been waived.[35] It will be implied only from an unequivocal and decisive act of the party, clearly showing his purpose to waive the right in question,[36] or from conduct tending to show some element of an estoppel on his part.[37]

The question whether a waiver is established may depend on the nature of the condition or the thing which it is asserted was waived.[38] Thus, the courts, not favoring forfeitures, are usually inclined to take hold of any circumstances which indicate an election to waive a forfeiture,[39] or any agreement to do so on which the party has relied and acted;[40] the waiver of a forfeiture may be sustained by circumstances which do not present the strong equities which would be required to create an estoppel.[41] On the other hand, where a right, statutory or otherwise, has become vested, the courts are slow to declare the same waived, unless the language or the conduct of the party possessing the right shows that he intended to waive it, or his language or conduct are such that it can be clearly inferred, or it may be said as a matter of law that he has waived the right.[42]

Waiver may be shown by words or conduct[43] or both,[44] by express declarations,[45] or by acts and declarations[46] manifesting an intent and purpose not to claim the advantage in question,[47] by direct evidence, or by circumstances,[48] or by a course of acts and conduct[49] which amounts to an estoppel.[50] Proof of expressed words,[51] of expressed consent and approval,[52] is not necessary. Expressed consent and approval, of necessity, may be proved by parol.[53]

Knowledge. The proof must be clear that the party against whom the doctrine of waiver is invoked knew what his rights were.[54]

Intention. The intention to waive the right or advantage in question, see supra § 69, must be shown clearly[55] and convincingly.[56] The best evidence of intention is to be found in the language used by the parties.[57] When the only proof of intention rests in what a party does or forbears to do, his acts or omissions to act which are relied on should be so manifestly consistent with, and indicative of, an intent voluntarily to relinquish a then known particular right or benefit that no other reasonable explanation of his conduct is possible.[58]

Intention need not necessarily be proved by expressed declarations,[59] but it may be shown by acts and conduct from which an intention to waive may reasonably be inferred.[60] It may be inferred from circumstances.[61] Intention may be proved by the existence of acts or language so inconsistent with the purpose of the person charged with waiver to stand on his rights as to leave no opportunity for a reasonable inference to the contrary.[62] The intention to waive a right or advantage may be shown even by nonaction;[63] it may be inferred from mere negligence, unexplained.[64]

Intention and meeting of minds. To establish waiver, it has been stated, the evidence must indicate a meeting of minds as well as the intentional forbearance to enforce the right in question.[65]

§ 163. Questions of Law and Fact

a. Estoppel
b. Waiver

a. Estoppel

Where the facts are undisputed and only one inference may be drawn, the question of estoppel is one of law, but otherwise it is a question of fact.

Under the rules stated in the C.J.S. title Trial §§ 203–265, also 64 C.J. p 296 note 48 et seq, where there is no dispute about the facts and only one inference can be drawn therefrom, it is a question of law whether or not the facts proved constitute an estoppel.[66] However, under all other circumstances the question whether an estoppel exists is one of

Case made by party to be estopped

Where it conclusively appears in the case made by the party against whom the estoppel is invoked, it becomes a question for the court.—Ornellas v. Moynihan, Mo.App., 16 S.W.2d 1007.

Question whether statements constituting estoppel were made

Whether alleged remarks claimed to constitute an estoppel were made is for jury; but whether such remarks, if made, are susceptible of inferences attributed to them, is for court.—General Electric Co. v. N. K. Ovalle, Inc., 6 A.2d 835, 335 Pa. 439.

Record in former suit

Testimony supporting plea of estoppel to assert title to homestead by record in bank's suit to foreclose vendor's lien would not make issue for jury, effect of record being for court.—Chapman v. Clark, Tex.Civ. App., 262 S.W. 161, affirmed, Com. App., 276 S.W. 197.

Admission of evidence resting on controverted facts

An exception to the admission in evidence of the record in another proceeding because defendant was estopped from relying thereon presents no error, where the fact claimed by plaintiff to establish the estoppel was denied by defendant, so that plaintiff, in effect, asked the court to determine a controverted fact in his favor.—Davis v. When facts regarded as undisputed

Where all the facts and circumstances in evidence showed an intention to hold trustees only in their official capacity, the mere testimony by plaintiff of an unasserted intent to hold them personally liable is not sufficient to require the submission of the issue of his intent to the jury.—Boyle v. out a jury.[70]

The direction of a verdict is erroneous when the evidence is conflicting,[71] or where it rests in parol and is not admitted,[72] or where different persons might come to different conclusions from the evidence.[73]

b. Waiver

Waiver is generally a question of fact.

Under the rules stated in the C.J.S. title Trial §§ 203–265, also 64 C.J. p 296 note 48 et seq, the question of waiver is generally one of fact[74] for the jury to decide, under proper instructions of the court,[75] or for the trial court sitting without a jury.[76] The question is one of fact for the jury where it is a matter of inference,[77] or is to be established by the weight of evidence.[78] If the established facts permit reasonable minds to differ as to the inferences or effects from them, a question of fact arises,[79] to be determined by court or jury according as the parties see fit to submit the controversy for decision.[80]

On the other hand, when the necessary facts are undisputed,[81] or are admitted or clearly established,[82] waiver becomes a question of law.[83] The question is one of law where but one inference can be drawn from the facts,[84] and it is not error for the court to charge the jury that they constitute waiver.[85] Whether or not the facts in question, if proved, constitute a waiver is a question of law, which the court must decide.[86]

Case made by party waiving right

Waiver conclusively appearing in case made by the party against whom the waiver is invoked is a question for the court.—Ornellas v. Moynihan, Mo.App., 16 S.W.2d 1007.

83. Pa.—Pittsburgh Const. Co. v.

A directed verdict on the ground of waiver is erroneous where the evidence is conflicting.[87] By moving for a directed verdict the maker of the motion admits as true the facts relied on by his adversary as constituting a waiver.[88]

Intention. The existence of the intention to waive the right or advantage in question, see supra § 69, is generally a question of fact.[89] Where the intention is disputed, it necessarily becomes a question for the determination of the jury;[90] it is for the jury to say what the conduct of the party against whom a waiver is claimed means or signifies.[91]

Although rarely to be inferred as a matter of law,[92] intention is not always a question of fact.[93] The intention to waive, although not expressly found, may be inferred as a matter of law where it is a necessary inference from the facts;[94] it may be inferred as a matter of law from conduct[95] where conduct indicating a waiver may be so inconsistent with a purpose to stand on one's rights as to leave no room for a reasonable inference to the contrary.[96]

§ 164. Instructions

Where estoppel or waiver is an issue, appropriate instructions should be given to the jury on submission.

General rules governing instructions ordinarily control the instructions to be given on the issue of estoppel or waiver.[97] Where there is an issue of estoppel, the court should instruct the jury as to the essential elements of the kind of estoppel relied on.[98]

Where estoppel in pais is an issue, see supra §§ 59–106, instructions as to the essential elements of such an estoppel should be given.[99] The court must

Clear and explicit

Instructions relating to estoppel should be clear and explicit.—Cox v. Matthews, 17 Ind. 367—21 C.J. p 1254 note 18.

Designation of instructions as estoppel

If the instructions are otherwise proper and sufficient, it is immaterial that the plea of estoppel is not submitted under the designation of estoppel.—Darst v. Ft. Dodge, D. M. & S. Ry. Co., 191 N.W. 288, 194 Iowa 1145—Miller v. Conn, 186 N.W. 902, 193 Iowa 458.

Instruction as to burden of proof

It is the duty of the court where an issue of estoppel is raised properly to instruct the jury as to the burden of proof.—Morgan v. Headley, 59 N.E. 935, 156 Ind. 320.
Burden of proof see supra § 160.

Invasion of province of jury

Instructions relating to estoppel should not invade the province of the jury.—Draffin v. Charleston, C. & C. R. Co., 13 S.E. 427, 34 S.C. 464—21 C.J. p 1254 note 19 [a].

Waiver

(1) While waiver is generally for jury, court should instruct jury of legal effect of finding thereon.—Shriver Oil Co. v. Interocean Oil Co., 146 A. 223, 157 Md. 341.

(2) Submitting question of waiver to jury, unaccompanied by any instruction as to what acts would be sufficient to constitute waiver, is error.—Kahn v. Schleisner, 166 A. 435, 165 Md. 106.

(3) Instruction that plaintiff, to sustain plea of waiver and estoppel, must show reliance on defendant's conduct to its prejudice, has been held to ignore distinction between waiver and estoppel, to contradict previous instruction not requiring such reliance for waiver, and to be incorrect.—Euclid Ave. State Bank v. Nesbitt, 207 N.W. 761, 201 Iowa 506, reversing 204 N.W. 253.

Refusal of instructions held improper

In employee's action, against employer, to recover for breach of contract of employment from week to week, refusal to charge that, if employee acquiesced in change in wages by accepting reduced wages for a long period of time he was "estopped" from claiming any damages therefrom, was error.—Cooksey v. Beaumont Mfg. Co., 9 S.E.2d 790, 194 S.C. 395.

99. Mo.—Willock Realty & Loan Co. v. Smith, App., 253 S.W. 45.

instruct the jury that the representations or silence relied on to create the estoppel were intended to deceive,[1] or were so culpably negligent as to amount to fraud;[2] that the party against whom the estoppel is claimed had knowledge of the truth of the material facts represented or concealed;[3] and that the party claiming the estoppel was in ignorance of such facts or without means of ascertaining their existence,[4] that he relied on such representations or silence,[5] and was warranted in so doing,[6] that he changed his position in reliance thereon,[7] and that he will sustain injury unless the estoppel is sustained.[8]

The giving of instructions in relation to estoppel is prejudicial error where estoppel is not pleaded,[9] or where there is no evidence of an estoppel;[10] and, in any event, the court should limit the consideration of the jury to the particular facts relied on to constitute the estoppel.[11] The court need only charge the jury as to the facts relied on to create the estoppel, although there may be other facts beyond those stated which would amount to an estoppel.[12]

§ 165. Verdict, Findings, and Judgment

A general verdict in favor of the party sought to be estopped negatives an estoppel.

A general verdict in favor of the party sought to be estopped establishes the fact that he was not estopped as alleged.[13] All of the essential elements of an estoppel must be included in the finding.[14] A

Implied findings

(1) Express finding on facts relied on as estoppel against allegations of cross complaint was not necessary, where court impliedly found against such facts by finding allegations set up in cross complaint were true.—Fair Oaks Bank v. Johnson, 244 P. 335, 198 Cal. 196.

(2) Where court failed to find existence of agreement between boat club and city park board settling controversy with respect to use of street giving access to club's docks, and there was evidence from which trial court could find that if there was such agreement, persons seeking to use the road by their subsequent acts and conduct did not intend to be bound thereby, parties who had used road for twenty years to reach boat docks were not "estopped" from prosecuting an action to enjoin city officials from restricting use of street to pedestrian traffic.—City of Evansville v. Evansville Boat Club, Ind.App., 27 N.E.2d 389.

Findings held not to show estoppel

(1) Finding that lessor did not by silence or acts lead lessee to believe he could sublease showed no basis for estoppel.—Litchner v. Staples, 273 P. 585, 95 Cal.App. 685.

(2) Finding that mortgagee, who was given worthless check for release and subsequently worthless mortgage and realty did not discover conspiracy to defraud until shortly before beginning suit showed there was no intentional relinquishment of known right and no estoppel to claim damages for fraud.—Davis v. Maislen, 165 A. 451, 116 Conn. 375.

Findings as to knowledge

finding is sufficient if it recites facts from which an estoppel necessarily follows.[15]

Where it is necessary specially to plead estoppel, see supra § 153, if facts constituting an estoppel are not pleaded, a finding that an estoppel exists is unauthorized,[16] but if it is unnecessary to plead estoppel, the court, which bases its decision on estoppel, must make a finding, notwithstanding that the estoppel was not pleaded.[17]

ESTOQUE. In Spanish law, a royal emblem or insignia denoting power and justice.[1]

ESTOVERIA SUNT ARDENDI, ARANDI, CONSTRUENDI, ET CLAUDENDI.[2]

ESTRAYS. See Animals § 85. The term is also used of flotsam at sea.[9]

ESTREAT. From the Latin "extractum."[10]

As a noun, an extract from the records of the criminal courts to serve as a foundation of proceedings against accused and his bail or surety, to amerce them.[11]

In English law, a true copy or duplicate of an original writing, especially of amercements or penalties set down in the rolls of court, to be levied by the bailiff or other officer on every offender;[12] also a forfeited recognizance taken out from among the other records for the purpose of being sent up to the exchequer, that the parties might be sued thereon.[13]

As a verb, to draw out, or extract;[14] to take out a forfeited recognizance from the records of a court, and return it to the court of exchequer, to be prosecuted;[15] and as the past tense or past participle, "estreated," taken from out the other records and bile was being exhibited for sale has been held to import that bailor knew thereof before sale.—Scruggs v. Crockett Automobile Co., Tex.Civ. App., 41 S.W.2d 509, error dismissed.

Findings as supporting judgment

(1) Jury's finding that payee informed maker of having no interest in notes supported judgment for maker on plea of estoppel, in the absence of objection to manner of submission.—Peurifoy v. Jones, Tex.Civ. App., 49 S.W.2d 949.

(2) Judgment denying mandatory injunction requiring removal of buildings from electric line right of way because of estoppel was held not sustained by findings or evidence.—City of Los Angeles v. Babcock, 283 P. 314, 102 Cal.App. 571.

ESTUPRO. In Spanish law, seduction.[23]

ET. Literally "And." The introductory word of several Latin and law French phrases in more or less common use.[24]

Et cætera or Et cetera. Its abbreviated forms are etc. and &C., see Abbreviations 1 C.J.S. p 276 note 5, and p 281 notes 10–12. In itself, the term implies no limitation, and its use is so varied that it is questionable whether it can be said to have any definite use or uniform interpretation;[25] it has even been said to have no well defined meaning;[26] and as sometimes used it is considered as meaningless and without effect,[27] being often disregarded as surplusage,[28] although, under other circumstances, the argument that the term or its abbreviated form means nothing has been rejected.[29]

In its literal and extended meanings, it has been defined as: And others, and other things, and so forth, and so on, or and the rest.[30] The words are generally used when a number of individuals of a class have been specified to indicate that more of the same sort might have been mentioned, but for shortness are omitted;[31] and so applying the "ejusdem generis" rule or the maxim, Noscitur a sociis, the phrase has been used to indicate others of a kind specified;[32] has been construed as referring to others of the like, or of the same, kind;[33] to things or articles of like character with, or of the same kind as, those previously enumerated;[34] and has been restricted to articles directly connected with those specified;[35] or only those things ejusdem generis;[36] to other things of like character[37] or of the same

EVAPORATION. The act of resolving or the state of being resolved into vapor; the conversion of a solid or liquid by heat into vapor, fumes, or steam; vaporization.[79] In a particular connection, evaporation has been held to constitute a natural loss of water, as distinguished from leakage or wasting of water.[80]

EVASIO. Latin, in old practice, an escape from prison or custody.[81]

EVASION. Act of eluding or avoiding, avoidance by artifice.[82] In a particular connection, the term implies a wrongful act as distinguished from an avoidance permitted by law.[83]

In Spanish law, the term means escape, as from a prison.[84]

"Evasion" has been held synonymous with "concealment" see 15 C.J.S. p 795 note 23, and "suppression."[85]

Phrases employing the word are set out in the note.[86]

(1) "The contest between the citizen and his government over taxes will beyond question last as long as that other great struggle with which it is often coupled. To describe its various phases as evasion rather than as avoidance seems to us to use the language of the ultimately victorious contestant rather than to speak as an impartial observer. The artifice or cunning implicit in the first term is not consistent with the approval given by the courts to a disposition of property in the manner best suited to avoid taxation."—Clapp v. EVENING. In strictness, that portion of the day which commences at sunset and continues during twilight;[95] from sunset until dark.[96] In common speech, in some localities, the closing part of the day and beginning of the night; the latter part of the day and the earlier part of the night, until bedtime;[97] the period between sunset, or the evening meal, and ordinary bedtime.[98] The term has been distinguished from "afternoon" see 2 C.J.S. p 1011 note 64.

In old English law, the term, in the plural, refers to the delivery at even or night of a certain portion of grass, or corn, etc., to a customary tenant, who performs the service of cutting, mowing, or reaping for his lord, given him as a gratuity or encouragement.[99]

EVENLY BALANCED. Equal in weight or force.[1] It has been compared with "improbable" and "probable."[2]

EVENT. Strictly speaking, an event has reference only to something that has taken place,[3] ordinarily it implies a past occurrence, and, in itself, does not imply futurity.[4] The word has been defined generally as meaning the fact of taking place or occurring;[5] anything that happens or comes to pass as distinguished from a thing that exists;[6] that which comes, arrives, or happens; that which falls out; any incident, good or bad, especially one that is important or remarkable;[7] and, when used with relation to cause and effect, as meaning that which follows from the cause, being called an event because it eventuates from causes;[8] the consequence of anything; the issue, conclusion, or end, that in which an action, operation, or series of operations, terminates;[9] the result;[10] although it has also been said that the word is not restricted to either the result or the cause.[11]

In practice, it has been more specifically defined as the decision of the question before the court;[12] the final outcome and end of the litigation;[13] the final success in an action.[14] Examples of what the term has been held to include, in one or another of the senses above indicated, are given in the subjoined note.[15]

rence,"[16] and "result."[17] It has been distinguished from "accident"[18] and "means."[19]

Fortuitous event. A strong term, used by lawyers for its positive strength, and selected when one wishes to express all of "accident" and more;[20] but said not to refer to causes set in motion by acts which afterward get beyond control.[21] It has been defined as meaning accident;[22] an event happening by chance or accident, occurring unexpectedly, or without known cause;[23] any accident produced by physical causes which are irresistible; such as a loss by lightning or storms, by the perils of the seas, by inundations and earthquakes, or by sudden death or illness.[24] In the subjoined notes examples are given of what, in particular connections, the phrase has been held to include,[25] and not to include.[26]

In the civil law, wherein the corresponding French phrase is "cas fortuit" see Cas 13 C.J.S. p 1768 note 15, it has been defined as meaning that which happens by a cause or force which we cannot resist.[27]

The term has been held equivalent to, or synonymous with, "act of God" see 1 C.J.S. p 1431 note 18, "casus fortuitous" see 14 C.J.S. p 32 note 18, "inevitable accident,"[28] and "unforeseen event."[29] It has been compared with, or distinguished from, "intervening impossibility,"[30] "irresistible force,"[31] and "reasons or causes beyond one's control" see Cause 14 C.J.S. p 51 note 37.

EVICT. To deprive of the possession of land;[64] to dispossess, or turn out of the possession of lands by process of law. Also to recover land by judgment of law.[65]

Evicted. It has been said that the word properly applies only to realty, and is used to describe either a deprivation of the possession of lands and tenements, or the inability to get promised possession.[66] In connection with a deprivation of possession, it implies an actual possession by the person evicted, before eviction.[67] It has also been applied to public office, and in that sense has been said to mean a deprivation by one of the office, or of the salary attached thereto, to which another is, or may be, entitled.[68] As used in pleading, it is said to have a legal meaning, expelled, moved, and put out.[69]

EVICTION. The term may be employed as referring either to the act or process of evicting, or to the state of being evicted.[70] It is derived from "evinco," meaning to overcome;[71] to evict, to dispossess by judicial course;[72] and has been defined as meaning deprivation of the possession of lands and tenements or inability to get promised possession[73] by reason of the hostile assertion of an irresistible title.[74] The term implies dispossession, ejection, ejectment, or ouster,[75] in some connections, by, or in the interest of, one having a better title.[76] In other connections it has been said to require a willful omission of duty or the commission of a wrongful act;[77] but not necessarily a manual or physical expulsion from the premises,[78] nor an assertion by judicial decision of a paramount title.[79] The term is borrowed from the feudal law, and is often misleading when adopted into our modern systems of conveyancing and of actions.[80] While it properly applies only to realty,[81] by a loose extension it is sometimes applied to the ousting of a person from the possession of chattels;[82] and even from an office.[83]

Eviction of tenant under a lease and eviction of landlord by paramount title see the C.J.S. title Landlord and Tenant §§ 445–459, also 36 C.J. p 255 note 73–p 274 note 93 and 21 C.J. p 1263 notes 54–66.

Phrases employing the word are set out in the note.[84]

I. IN GENERAL

§ 1. Preliminary Definitions

Definitions of the terms "evidence," "testimony," and "proof" respectively, either as used alone or with qualifying words or phrases, are considered in §§ 2–4 infra.

§ 2. Evidence

Evidence may be defined as that which demonstrates, makes clear, or ascertains the truth of the very fact or point in issue.

Evidence broadly defined, is the means from which an inference may logically be drawn as to the existence of a fact; that which makes evident or plain.[1] Evidence signifies that which demonstrates, makes clear, or ascertains the truth of the very fact or point in issue, either on the one side or on the other.[2] In legal acceptation, the term "evidence" includes all the means by which any alleged matter of fact, the truth of which is submitted to investigation, is established or disproved.[3] Although the term "evidence" is sometimes used as synonymous with "facts,"[4] the terms are not really synonymous,[5] for "evidence" is limited to that which may properly be considered by the court or submitted to the jury for its consideration.[6]

Competent evidence. By "competent" evidence is meant that which the very nature of the thing to be proved requires as the fit and appropriate proof in the particular case.[7] The term has also been used and construed as synonymous with "admissible,"[8] "relevant,"[9] and "sufficient" or "adequate."[10] On the other hand, it is clear that evidence may be logically relevant and yet inadmissible because not competent, that is, because not the character of proof which the law permits in the particular case.[11]

To say that evidence is incompetent is equivalent to saying that it is inadmissible.[12]

Direct and circumstantial evidence. Direct evidence is evidence which if believed proves the existence of the fact in issue without any inference or presumption;[13] while circumstantial evidence, as dis-

Direct evidence

(1) "Direct evidence" describes disputed circumstance, leaving no room for deduction or inference.—Sullivan v. Mountain States Power Co., 9 P.2d 1033, 139 Or. 282.

(2) "Direct evidence," when strictly defined, means that which immediately points to the question at issue, or is evidence of the precise fact at issue and on trial, by witnesses who can testify that they saw the act done, or heard the words spoken which constitute the facts to cussed infra § 161, is evidence which, without going directly to prove the existence of a fact, gives rise to a logical inference that such fact does exist. The distinction between these two classes of evidence is of little practical value,[14] especially in view of the obvious necessity that all evidence be direct with respect to its own subject matter, for the law will not permit the drawing of an inference from a supposed fact of whose existence there is no direct proof.[15]

Extrinsic evidence may be evidence not legitimately before the tribunal in which the determination of a cause is made.[16]

Judicial evidence. Judicial evidence is that portion of evidence in general which under the rules of legal procedure is received by tribunals as tending to establish the existence of a fact involved in an issue submitted to judicial determination.[17]

Juridical evidence. Evidence of mutable phenomena through human agency addressed to a human tribunal.[18]

Legal evidence. Legal evidence is that from which, according to legal logic, a legal fact is inferable.[19] Legal evidence is admissible evidence.[20]

Positive and negative evidence. The term "positive" has been applied in a number of cases to evidence which is direct as distinguished from circumstantial evidence,[21] but a more accurate use of the term is to denote affirmative as distinguished from negative evidence.[22] Evidence is positive where the witness states that a certain thing did or did not happen or exist, and negative where the witness states that he did not see or know of the happening or existence of a circumstance or fact.[23]

Probable evidence. Presumptive evidence is sometimes called probable evidence from its foundation in probability.[24]

Probative evidence is testimony carrying the quality of proof and having fitness to induce conviction of truth. It consists of fact and reason cooperating as coördinate factors.[25]

Real evidence, sometimes referred to as "physical facts," has been defined as meaning a fact, the existence of which is perceptible to the senses.[26]

Rebutting evidence. Rebutting evidence is that which is given to explain, repel, counteract, or disprove facts given in evidence by the adverse party.[27] It is that evidence which has become relevant or important only as an effect of some evidence introduced by the other side.[28] Rebutting evidence means not merely evidence which contradicts the witnesses on the opposite side, but also evidence in denial of some affirmative fact which the answering party has endeavored to prove.[29] It embraces all testimony which tends to counteract or overcome the legal effect of the evidence for the adverse party.[30]

Rule of evidence. A "rule of evidence" may be defined to be the mode and manner of proving the competent facts and circumstances on which a party relies to establish the fact in dispute in judicial procedure.[31]

"Common law of evidence" is a combination of rules regulating the admissibility of evidence in trials in certain courts of law.[32]

§ 3. Testimony

According to its strict legal definition, testimony is evidence which comes to the tribunal through living witnesses speaking under oath or affirmation.

While the term "testimony" is frequently employed as equivalent, in legal effect, to "evidence,"[33] such use is inaccurate, for the two terms are not synonymous.[34] "Evidence" is the broader term and includes all testimony,[35] but "testimony" is accurately used to designate only a particular kind or species of evidence,[36] namely, that which comes to the tribunal through living witnesses speaking under oath or affirmation in the presence of the tribunal.[37] It has also been said that what witnesses say under oath is "testimony," but only so much of

"Proof" is the result or effect of evidence, while "evidence" is the medium or means by which a fact is proved or disproved.

Judicial "evidence" stands to "proof," when the latter term is properly employed, in the relation of means to an end. Proof is the result; evidence, the means for attaining it.[39] "Evidence" and "proof" are often used as synonymous terms,[40] but such use is inaccurate.[41]

"Affirmative proof" means such evidence of the truth of the matters asserted as tends to establish them, regardless of the character of the evidence offered.[42]

Judicial proof has been defined as a clear and evident declaration and demonstration of a matter which was before doubtful, conveyed in a judicial manner.[43]

Positive proof is affirmative proof, as opposed to negative;[44] direct proof, as contradistinguished from that which is circumstantial or merely presumptive;[45] proof as positive as the circumstances reasonably afford, and positive enough to satisfy the judgment of reasonable men.[46]

Testimonial evidence

The phrase "testimonial evidence" must not be understood as applicable exclusively to assertions made on the witness stand. Any assertion, taken as the basis of an inference to the existence of the matter asserted is testimony, whether made in court or not. Assertions made on the witness stand are merely the commonest class of testimonial evidence. The qualifications of a witness are equally essential in the use of extrajudicial assertions.—State v. § 5. What Law Governs

The laws of the forum govern as to the rules of evidence.

It is well established that the courts of one state or country are not bound by the rules of evidence adopted in another jurisdiction, but the admissibility of evidence,[48] as well as the burden of proof,[49] and weight and sufficiency of evidence,[50] is always governed by the lex fori. Where action is brought in a state court to enforce rights given by a federal statute, the rules of evidence of the state courts control, unless it is otherwise provided by the federal law.[51] It has been held, however, that the general rule that a state has the right to prescribe the rules of evidence for its courts has no application where a federal question is involved, as to which the federal acts and decisions are controlling.[52] Evidence tending to impose a liability relates to the right of action and is governed by the lex loci delicti.[53]

II. JUDICIAL NOTICE

A. IN GENERAL

§ 6. Definition, Terminology, and Distinctions

Judicial notice is the cognizance of certain facts which judges and jurors may properly take and act on without proof because they already know them.

Judicial notice or knowledge may be defined as the cognizance of certain facts which judges and jurors may properly take and act on without proof because they already know them.[54] Judicial notice is a branch of the law of evidence,[55] it being a judicial short cut, a doing away, in the case of evidence, with the formal necessity for evidence, there being no real necessity for it.[56] It is said that the term "judicial notice" means no more than that the court will bring to its aid and consider, without proof of the facts, its knowledge of those matters of public concern which are known by all well-informed persons.[57] Judicial notice is properly divided into judicial knowledge and common knowledge. Judicial knowledge is that which the court must possess and take cognizance of, and common knowledge is that which the court may declare applicable to the action without the necessity of proof.[58]

"Judicial notice" is the most commonly used term for this function, but it is also termed "judicial knowledge,"[59] "judicial cognizance,"[60] and notice "ex officio."[61] It has also been stated, however, that judicial notice and judicial knowledge are far from being one.[62]

"Legislative notice" distinguished. The phrase "judicial notice" belongs to judicial proceedings and the cases that treat of it have no application whatever to the activities of the legislature. Legislative notice is far broader than judicial notice.[63]

§ 7. General Scope

The list of things covered by judicial notice is constantly expanding, and no exact limit can be placed thereon.

The list of things covered by judicial notice is constantly expanding, and no exact limit can be placed thereon.[64] Generally speaking, judicial knowledge is limited to facts evidenced by public records and facts of general notoriety.[65] Most matters which the court may notice fall into one of two classes, those which come to the knowledge of men generally in the course of the ordinary experience of life, and are therefore in the mind of the trier, or those which are generally accepted by mankind as true and are capable of ready demonstration by means commonly recognized as authoritative.[66]

§ 8. Under Statute

Statutes enumerating matters of which courts may or shall take judicial notice are variously construed as permissive, mandatory, or exclusive.

Some codes and statutes enumerate certain matters of which courts may or shall take judicial notice.[67] The interpretations that various courts have placed on these provisions are not uniform,[68] some provisions having been construed as permissive,[69] and others as mandatory.[70] Some codes by their express terms furnish an exclusive rule on the subject and exclude judicial notice of matters not therein enumerated.[71]

§ 9. Matters of Common Knowledge

Judicial notice will be taken of matters of common knowledge.

Courts may properly take judicial notice of facts that may be regarded as forming part of the common knowledge of every person of ordinary understanding and intelligence.[72] Other common state-

termined by the jury, and the court cannot take judicial notice that it is false.[80] Also, it is necessary that the community throughout which a fact is supposed to be commonly known should be one whose extent bears some reasonable relation to the territorial jurisdiction of the court itself.[81]

The limits of judicial notice are not capable of being prescribed in general terms with any degree of exactness,[82] but it seems plain from the authorities that notoriety is, generally speaking, the ultimate test when facts are sought to be brought within the realm of judicial notice.[83] This want of exactness, however, comes from the difficulty in many cases of determining what is sufficient notoriety of a given fact to bring it within the judicial notice of the court.[84] Although "a fact must be pretty well known and pretty obvious besides before it can be taken judicial notice of,"[85] it is not necessary for courts to wait, before taking judicial notice of a thing, until everybody knows and understands it.[86] Judicial notice is taken of what is within the knowledge of most men.[87] The test has been said to be: (1) Is the fact one of common, everyday knowledge in the jurisdiction, which every one of average intelligence and knowledge of things about him can be presumed to know? (2) Is it certain and indisputable?[88] A court will not take judicial notice of any fact which is in part dependent on the existence or nonexistence of a fact of which the court has no constructive knowledge.[89]

As the common knowledge of man ranges far and wide, so the doctrine of judicial notice embraces matters curiously diverse,[90] and, in addition to the matters hereinafter discussed in detail in §§ 14–102, a wide variety of particular facts have been judicially noticed as being matters of common knowledge.[91] It should be borne in mind, however, in considering such recognitions as precedents, that what may be proper subjects of judicial notice at one time and place may not be at another.[92]

§ 10. Facts Once Judicially Known

Judicial notice may be taken of facts once judicially known.

A judge may assume judicial knowledge of facts which he has learned through former litigation in the same jurisdiction, or at an earlier hearing in the same case; and he may take judicial cognizance of what he has himself done as judge, as for example that he has in his official capacity signed a certain paper.[93] Facts notorious in a community because connected with protracted or celebrated litigation naturally come within the knowledge of judges and are accepted as true without proof.[94]

§ 11. Personal Knowledge of Judge

Judicial knowledge is generally limited to what a judge may properly know in his judicial capacity.

Judicial knowledge is limited to what a judge may properly know in his judicial capacity, and he is not authorized to make his individual knowledge of a fact not generally or professionally known the basis of his action.[95] A judge, however, is at liberty to take judicial notice of a fact within his personal knowledge where it amounts to no more than the sharing by the judge as an individual of a matter of general common knowledge,[96] or of a matter generally known in the legal profession of which he is a member, although such knowledge is largely confined to lawyers.[97] Some modern cases permit a judge who knows a rule of common or statutory law in force in a sister state,[98] or foreign country,[99] to take judicial cognizance thereof, but there is authority to the contrary on both the first[1] and second[2] propositions.

§ 12. Mode of Ascertaining Facts Required to Be Judicially Noticed

In ascertaining matters of fact or of law to be judicially noticed, the judge may resort to, or obtain information from, any source of knowledge which he feels would be helpful.

Since judicial cognizance may extend to matters beyond the actual knowledge of the judge,[3] the judge, in ascertaining facts to be judicially noticed may resort to or obtain information from any source of knowledge which he feels would be helpful to him,[4] always seeking that which is most appropriate.[5] When the matter is a proper subject of judicial knowledge, the judge, in order to attain mental certainty, may require the assistance of the party who invoked his judicial knowledge, he may investigate the matter for himself, or he may pursue both courses.[6] The scope, direction, and details of such investigation are entirely within the discretion and under the direction of the judge, uncontrolled by the rules of evidence or the wishes or suggestions of the parties;[7] but it is the duty of the judge to pursue inquiries sufficient to make his knowledge real as far as possible,[8] since it is just as much an error for the court to mistake a fact of which it has taken cognizance as to mistake a principle of law.[9] The judge may refer to properly authenticated[10] public official documents or records of all kinds,[11] to dictionaries,[12] encyclopedias,[13] geographies,[14] or other books or periodicals or public addresses.[15] He may even inquire of others.[16] Where the judge is in doubt as to the sovereign character of a party,[17] or as to the recognition by our government of a foreign government,[18] he may call on the executive, particularly the department of state, for the necessary information.

Court will resort to every proper method of ascertaining from state departments whatever it must know judicially, but does not actually know.—Briscoe v. Buzbee, 143 So. 887, 163 Miss. 574, overruling sug-

Geographical facts. The judge may inform himself as to the facts of geography, such as the navigable character of a river,[19] the distance between two points,[20] or the location of a given place within the jurisdiction,[21] by resort to histories,[22] geogra-

Matters of law. Since knowledge of the law is of the essence of the judicial office,[26] if a particular judge does not know what the law is on a given point, it is his duty to ascertain it.[27] In so doing he may, as in cases of optional cognizance, resort to any source of information which he thinks enlightening and trustworthy,[28] such as documents in the office of the secretary of state,[29] election returns and records,[30] etc., "always seeking first for that which in its nature is most appropriate, unless the positive law has enacted a different rule."[31] A judge may require the assistance of the parties, as where it is prescribed by the rule of court that all statutes relied on shall be set out in a party's brief.[32] Statutes, opinions, and textbooks are frequently read to the court, not as evidence, but for the purpose of refreshing the memory of the judge.[33]

Where the court is required by statute to take judicial knowledge of the laws of other states see infra §§ 18–20, it is the duty of the court to pursue inquiries sufficient to make that knowledge real as far as possible.[34] Under some statutes the court may take judicial notice of the law of another state as found in the cases cited in the record and collected in the briefs, and the court may consider other pertinent decisions.[35] Some of the statutes expressly authorize the court to acquire knowledge of such laws by consulting any printed book purporting to contain, state, or explain the same.[36]

Meaning or translation of language. Where the court is authorized to construe,[37] or to charge the jury concerning,[38] the ordinary meaning of words, evidence of their common meaning may be received and considered by the court.[39] The court may resort to dictionaries,[40] works of history,[41] or other writings.[42] These works are not strictly evidence,[43] and are not conclusive,[44] but are used, at the option of the judge, to refresh his memory and bring ac-

Meaning not given

While definitions by standard dictionaries are not controlling for purposes of judicial decision, they are at least persuasive that meanings which they do not embrace are not common.—Aschenbrenner v. tual knowledge up to judicial knowledge.[45] The court may refer to dictionaries and encyclopedias for the definition and scope of scientific terms or names, when necessary to go outside of the record, or where the testimony of experts is conflicting.[46] In rendering the language of an instrument from the Hawaiian into the English language the trial judge is at liberty to use his own knowledge of the Hawaiian language, and also to call to his assistance the official interpreters of the court, and, if it is deemed advisable, other experts.[47]

On matters of public history the judge may examine public documents, histories, or other writings or historical data.[48]

Time, days, and dates. The judge in determining chronological facts, or such facts as the time of the rising and setting of the sun on a given day, may resort to an almanac[49] or calendar,[50] not as evidence[51] but for the purpose of refreshing the memory.[52]

a. In general
b. By what courts taken
c. Suggestion or presentation of fact
d. Caution and discretion in use
e. Doctrine of judicial notice inverted
f. When facts are agreed, admitted, or uncontroverted

a. In General

Judicial notice takes the place of evidence.

Proof is not required of facts of which the court takes judicial notice.[53] The doctrine of judicial notice is based on convenience and expediency,[54] and to say that a court will take judicial notice of a fact is merely another way of saying that the usual forms of evidence will be dispensed with if knowledge of the fact can be otherwise acquired.[55] Judicial knowledge is not reached by the use of evidence; it is a matter pertaining to the judicial function and its existence, like that of an admission, stipulation, or rule of presumption, dispenses with evidence as to the point covered.[56] Facts judicially noticed are thereby presented to the court as effectually as though they had been established by proper proof,[57] and are of equal force,[58] and it has even been held that as a means of establishing facts judicial notice is superior to evidence.[59] Although it has been held that parties have no right to introduce evidence of a matter which is the subject of judicial notice,[60] and where they offer such evidence, it may be properly rejected by the court,[61] it has also been held that the taking of judicial notice does not prevent the opponent from disputing the matter if he believes it disputable.[62]

It is essential to the taking of judicial notice of a particular fact that that fact be relevant and material;[63] and the right of a court to exercise judicial knowledge is subordinate to requirements of procedure.[64] Judicial knowledge of one matter does not relieve plaintiff or relator of the burden of proving other material matters.[65]

An essential fact not expressly appearing in a case may be legitimately deduced from another fact or facts of which the court is authorized to take judicial cognizance.[66]

Whatever is judicially known may properly be used by counsel in argument to the jury as a fact established in the case;[67] and it is the right and duty of the court to charge the jury in the trial of a cause as to the existence of facts of which judicial cognizance is taken.[68]

Facts of such common knowledge as to become the subject of judicial notice without proof are an exception to the general rule requiring findings of fact to be based on the evidence.[69]

The invalidity of a statute may be shown by things which will be judicially noticed.[70] The court cannot take judicial knowledge of facts to establish or disprove the very issue on which the case is tried, but only facts collateral to such issue;[71] nor can the court, by taking judicial notice of facts which are not alleged, change the case from that stated by plaintiff.[72]

Aid of pleadings. Neither in criminal, see the C. J.S. title Indictments and Informations § 113, also 31 C.J. p 670 note 35, nor in civil, see the C.J.S. title Pleadings § 7, also 49 C.J. p 36 note 18, cases is it necessary to allege any fact of which the court will judicially take notice.

b. By What Courts Taken

All courts may make use of the doctrine of judicial notice.

To take judicial notice and apply it to the decision of a case is a right which appertains to every court of justice, from the lowest to the highest.[73] The application of the doctrine of judicial notice is not confined to courts of record.[74] Certain boards and special tribunals which are not strictly courts but which partake of their nature and the findings of which partake of the nature of judgments may take judicial notice of certain matters.[75] An appellate court can properly take judicial notice of any matter of which a court of original jurisdiction may properly take notice,[76] and the appellate court will judicially notice any facts that the court of original jurisdiction must judicially notice.[77]

The necessity of incorporating matters judicially noticed in the record on appeal is discussed in Appeal and Error § 1212.

c. Suggestion or Presentation of Fact

Unless the matter is one of which the court must take notice, or unless it is self-evident, a fact of which a party wishes a court to take notice should be suggested or presented to the court in some way.

Some matters of judicial knowledge are so self-evident as to be ever present in the mind, so that they naturally enter into a decision of any point to which they have application.[78] There are other things, however, which, from motives of policy, the law requires a court judicially to notice, or have knowledge of, but of which in reality it is ignorant. It is the duty of a litigant desiring the advantage of that knowledge to suggest it to the court. The court is not bound to take judicial notice of a fact where it is not called on to do so either by counsel or from other facts introduced in evidence and it is one to which the mind of the court would not ordinarily be directed.[79] On the other hand, an applicable public statute of the state or of the United States may and must be judicially noticed regardless of whether or not it was called to the court's attention by counsel.[80] It has also been held, however, that the rule that the federal courts will take judicial notice of state statutes does not mean that the court must know and apply at all times every statute of the state, without having the existence and contents of such statute brought to its attention at a proper time.[81] In some jurisdictions, although the court will take judicial notice of municipal ordinances, see infra § 27, ordinances must be called to the court's attention in order for notice thereof to be taken.[82]

d. Caution and Discretion in Use

The taking of judicial notice as to a matter of fact is discretionary, and the power should be exercised with caution.

The doctrine of judicial notice rests on the wisdom and discretion of the courts.[83] The power to take judicial notice is to be exercised by courts with caution; care must be taken that the requisite notoriety exists; and every reasonable doubt upon the subject should be promptly resolved in the negative.[84] Except when required to do so by a mandatory statute, courts are not bound to take judi-

Caution
In taking judicial knowledge, great care and caution must be exercised, and court should be reasonably certain as to everything of which it takes judicial knowledge.—Livermore v. Beal, 64 P.2d 987, 18 Cal. App.2d 535, certiorari denied 58 S.Ct. 32, 302 U.S. 712, 713, 82 L.Ed. 550, two cases, rehearing denied 58 S.Ct. 260, 302 U.S. 777, 82 L.Ed. 601, and 58 S.Ct. 261, 302 U.S. 778, 82 L.Ed. 601, certiorari denied Boyd v. Elliott, 58 S.Ct. 32, 302 U.S. 712, 82 L.Ed. 550, rehearing denied 58 S.Ct. 260, 302 U.S. 777, 82 L.Ed. 601, certiorari denied Kreiss v. Elliott, 58 S.Ct. 32, 302 U.S. 712, 82 L.Ed. 550, rehearing denied 58 S.Ct. 261, 302 U.S. 778, 82 L.Ed. 601.

cial notice of matters of fact; whether they will do so or not depends on the nature of the subject, the issue involved, and the apparent justice of the case.[85] Even if the matter is one of judicial cognizance, there is still no error or impropriety in requiring or receiving evidence.[86] On the other hand, where a matter of judicial cognizance is one of law the court is bound to take judicial notice of it.[87]

e. Doctrine of Judicial Notice Inverted

Knowledge of facts of which the court may take judicial notice may be imputed to an ordinarily intelligent adult person.

In many cases where judicial knowledge is based on commonplace observation and experience, the court, by justifiable inversion, will impute the same knowledge to an ordinarily intelligent adult person in a particular instance,[88] unless actual knowledge is required by law;[89] or, on the other hand, the want of such knowledge may be inferred if the court is conscious of its judicial ignorance in that behalf.[90] On the other hand, it has also been held that the rule of judicial notice has no application to persons. It is a rule of evidence for the government of courts, and, under this view, a person cannot be held to have knowledge of all those things of which a court may take judicial notice.[91]

f. When Facts Are Agreed, Admitted, or Uncontroverted

Agreed, admitted, or uncontroverted facts do not preclude the court from taking judicial notice to the contrary.

An uncontroverted allegation in a pleading,[92] uncontroverted evidence produced to establish a fact,[93] or admissions of fact by the parties[94] do not preclude the court from finding the fact to be otherwise by resorting to its judicial knowledge. Stipulations or admissions of counsel cannot bring facts within the sphere of judicial knowledge which in law do not belong there.[95] It has been declared doubtful whether a case can properly be determined on an agreed statement of facts, unless the facts agreed on conform to what is judicially known to be the truth;[96] and, on the other hand, that an appellate court will abstain from exercising judicial knowledge in such a case.[97]

B. JUDICIAL NOTICE OF STATUTES OR OTHER LAW

§ 14. In General

The rules of the common law and the doctrines of equity jurisprudence are subjects of judicial notice.

Land grants

(1) Although the court can take judicial notice of the act of congress granting the right of way to a railroad, it cannot take notice that the grant attached to any particular tract of land, or that a particular tract of land was public land at the time of the taking effect of the grant.—Lasby v. Burgess, 248 P. 190, 76 Mont. 452, followed in Burgess v. Lasby, 248 P. 192, 76 Mont. 452.

(2) The court will take judicial notice of the invalidity of the part of the grant by the United States to trict of Columbia[9] and by the continental congress.[10] Likewise, from motives of necessity, as well as of public policy,[11] the constitution[12] and public statutes[13] of a state are judicially recognized by all courts of that state.

the Southern Pacific Railroad Company in 1871, 16 St. 573, which overlaps the grant to the Atlantic & Pacific Railway in 1866, 14 St 292.—Huntington v. Donovan, 192 P. 543, 183 Cal. 746—Southern Pac. R. Co. v. Painter, 45 P. 320, 113 Cal. 247.

Mining claims

Judicial notice will be taken of the manner in which, and the laws under which, title to mining claims may be obtained from the United States.

Utah—Jones Mining Co. v. Cardiff Min. & Mill. Co., 191 P. 426, 56 Utah 449.

Property of Indians

It has been held, however, that the supreme court is not presumed conversant with every congressional act relating to the property of the Osage Indians, and, in absence of proper reference thereto, will not search out the details thereof.—In re Martin's Estate, 80 P.2d 561, 183 Okl. 177.

Similar provisions

In interpreting provision of bill appropriating money in settlement of claim against United States, court could take judicial notice that in a very large proportion of all similar bills there was invariably a limitation on the amount of fee which an agent or an attorney might receive.—Nesbit v. Frederick Snare Corporation, 96 F.2d 535, 68 App.D.C. 263, certiorari denied 59 S.Ct. 67, 305 U.S. 608, 83 L.Ed. 387.

State title to lands

Supreme court judicially knows that, when Utah was admitted to statehood, fee to lands under navigable waters vested in state, subject to congress' paramount control for commerce.—State v. Rolio, 262 P. 987, 71 Utah 91.

matter of the suit,[25] but judicial notice cannot be taken of a law before the date on which it is to take effect.[26] Judicial notice of the statutes of the state requires the court to take cognizance of a negative, that is, of the absence of any statute containing this or that provision.[27] An amendment of a statute is inseparable from the statute itself and is therefore judicially noticed.[28] The court may take judicial notice of the fact that a portion of a statute, the validity of which is challenged, was attached to the original bill by way of amendment.[29] The existence of a fact necessary to the original or continued application of a statute is not judicially noticed.[30] It is a matter of common knowledge that general revisions of statutes are made without consideration of their prior interpretation.[31] The fact that a statute evidences the public policy may also be judicially noticed.[32]

Courts, in dealing with the validity and construction of a statute, are entitled to take judicial notice of all local factual considerations apparent to the legislative department out of which the impulse for its enactment arose.[33] The evil which the legislature intended to correct in framing a constitutional amendment or a statute is judicially noticed where the knowledge thereof is derived from a consideration of various prior public statutes[34] or public his-

Benefit to land
As respects constitutionality of statute authorizing development of electric power by irrigation district, reviewing court could take judicial knowledge that certain land included in district would be benefited.—Nev-Cal Electric Securities Co. v. Imperial Irr. Dist., C.C.A.Cal., 85 F.2d 886, certiorari denied 57 S.Ct. 493, 300 U.S. 662, 81 L.Ed. 871.

Classified legislation
"In determining the need and propriety of classified legislation, where the same does not appear upon the face of the legislative enactment, the court may resort to its judicial knowledge of the contemporaneous conditions and situation of the people, the existing economic, sociologic, and civic policy of the state, and all other matters of common knowledge."—Martin v. Superior Court of Sacramento County, 227 P. 762, 766, 194 Cal. 93.

In case of invalidity
In action for declaratory judgment determining constitutionality of statute imposing tax on corporate dividends, supreme court could not take judicial notice of facts tending to establish whether legislature would have enacted statute had legislature believed it would be invalid as to foreign corporations.—State ex rel. Froedtert Grain & Malting Co. v. Tax Commission of Wisconsin, 267 N.W. 52, 221 Wis. 225, 104 A.L.R. 1478, denying rehearing 265 N.W. 672, 221 Wis. 225, 104 A.L.R. 1478.

That Mississippi levee was cut under governor's orders, flooding land, was within knowledge of court to be considered in interpreting legislation providing for reparation.—Foret v. Board of Levee Com'rs of Orleans Levee Dist., 125 So. 437, 169 La. 427.

Emergency legislation
(1) In some jurisdictions, it is well known that many acts have been passed during a number of years containing emergency clauses which were attached to the act for the sole purpose of expediting its going into effect, whereas, in fact, there was no emergency.—Furlong v. South Park Com'rs, 151 N.E. 510, 320 Ill. 507.

(2) It is common knowledge that, prior to adoption of the Initiative and Referendum Amendment to the Constitution, an emergency clause was attached to almost all laws enacted, and, to prevent this practice, people inserted in Constitution requirement that fact constituting such emergency be stated.—Gentry v. Harrison, 110 S.W.2d 497, 194 Ark. 916.

acts of the legislative department of the state, the courts may examine the legislative history of statutes.[37] The history of legislation embodied in a particular statute may be judicially noticed.[38] Courts may consider the "history of the times" to notice that a proposed constitutional amendment was treated as having failed of adoption.[39] The court is also required to take judicial notice of the general conditions to which the law applies.[40] The mischief which would result from a particular construction of a constitutional provision has been judicially noticed.[41]

The laws of an antecedent government,[42] whether of another nation,[43] state,[44] or territory,[45] which prevailed in territory subsequently acquired by the United States or erected into a state or territory are not for the purposes of judicial notice to be regarded as foreign laws, but rather as laws of the state or territory into which such territory was created, and hence they may be judicially noticed in all cases where the laws of such states and territories are the subject of judicial notice.

§ 17. Unwritten Law

The unwritten law of the forum will be judicially noticed.

Courts judicially know as of course the unwritten law of the forum, which it is their function to administer,[46] including public policy.[47] A common-law court as well as courts of equity will judicially notice the doctrines of equity jurisprudence and practice;[48] and conversely a court sitting in equity judicially knows the doctrines of the common law and the general rules for their administration.[49]

Opinions of the attorney general have been judicially noticed.[50]

§ 18. Laws of Other States, Territories, or Provinces

In the absence of a statute to the contrary, courts do not take judicial notice of the laws of other states.

It is a general rule that the courts of one state do not take judicial notice of the laws of another state,[51] but this rule has been sharply criticizsented to the court for examination.[55] Under The Uniform Judicial Notice of Foreign Law Act, the courts are required to take judicial notice of the common law and statutes of every state, territory, and other jurisdiction of the United States,[56] but in order for a litigant to invoke the benefits of such foreign law he must give reasonable notice in the pleadings or otherwise to the adverse party of his intention to do so, such notice being a prerequisite to offering proof of such foreign law or asking the court to take judicial notice thereof.[57] A statute requiring the court to take judicial notice of the statutes and judicial decisions of another state when pleaded does not bring into court the procedure of another state, and refers to the law of another state which a party has a right to plead.[58] Some of the state courts have held that, for the purpose of giving full faith and credit to a judgment of another state, as required by the constitution of the United States, they will take judicial notice of the laws of such other state;[59] but this view has been repudiated by the supreme court of the United States and by many of the state courts.[60]

Judicial notice may be taken that statutes of a particular type have been sustained in various states and their constitutionality upheld by the United States supreme court.[61]

§ 19. Constitutions and Public Statutes

In the absence of statutory authorization, judicial notice will not be taken of the constitutions and public statutes of other states.

It is a general rule that a state or territorial court does not judicially notice the constitution or statutes of another state or territory.[62] In an ever in-

Pleading and proof

(1) Under some statutes the court is not required to take judicial notice of the laws of a sister state, and in order for a party to take advantage of the statute he must call the court's attention to such foreign law by pleadings or proof.—Murphy v. Absence of statute

Under a statute requiring judicial notice to be taken of statutes of sister states, the court will notice the fact that in a particular field, such as automobile guest statutes, a sister state has no statutory enactments. O'Neal v. Caffarello, 25 N.E.2d 534, 303 Ill.App. 574.

Cases decided before adoption of such statutes adhered to the general rule that judicial notice would not be taken.—Donian v. Danielian, 266 P. 817, 90 Cal.App. 675—23 C.J. p 133 note 29 [a].

Operation of statute

The statute requiring courts to take judicial notice of common law and statutes of every state and to determine such laws, subject to review, is inapplicable to case tried before such statute went into effect.—O'Neal v. Caffarello, 25 N.E.2d 534, 303 Ill.App. 574.

Pleaded statutes

(1) Under some statutes, where the law of another state is pleaded, the court will take judicial notice of the public statutes of such state.—Barnes v. St. Louis-San Francisco Ry. Co., 92 S.W.2d 164, 338 Mo. 497—Corbett v. Terminal R. Ass'n of St. Louis, 82 S.W.2d 97, 336 Mo. 972—Oxford v. St. Louis-San Francisco Ry. Co., 52 S.W.2d 983, 331 Mo. 53—Esmar v. (2) Under such a statute, pleading and proof of a foreign statute is necessary before a party can require the court to take judicial notice thereof.—Mississippi Cottonseed Products Co. v. First Nat. Bank in St. Louis, Mo.App., 142 S.W.2d 1106—Morriss v. Finkelstein, Mo.App., 127 S.W.2d 46—Esmar v. Haeussler, 115 S.W.2d 54, 234 Mo.App. 217, transferred, see 106 S.W.2d 412, 341 Mo. 33—Neff v. Fogelstrom, 300 S.W. 841, 221 Mo.App. 1243.

(3) Judicial notice cannot be taken, under this statute, of sections of foreign laws which are neither pleaded nor proved, although other sections are well pleaded.—Noell v.

courts sometimes notice generally the legislative source of laws of another state or territory at a prior date,[64] and also notice, as a matter of common knowledge, that uniform or substantially like statutory provisions as to a certain matter exist in all or in a number of states.[65] Where such is a matter of common knowledge, the fact that a constitutional amendment or statute of the forum was patterned after that of another state may be judicially noticed.[66]

§ 20. Unwritten Law

In the absence of a statute to the contrary, courts do not take judicial notice of the unwritten law of another state.

The courts of one state, as a general rule, do not take judicial notice of the unwritten law or judicial decisions of sister states,[67] except for the purpose of construing the laws of the forum or determining what they are,[68] or as evidence of the common or general law.[69] Decisions of a state court construing its statutes will not be judicially noticed in a sister state,[70] except so far as they interpret the rules of the common law existing in the sister state, independently of the statutes.[71] However, the courts of some states notice generally that the common law prevails in divers sister states,[72] or that it was in force at one time in a particular sister state.[73] Judicial notice will be taken that the common law was declared to be a part of the fundamental law of

(4) A foreign statute pleaded, but not proved, is not in the case under such statute.—First Nat. Bank v. Gordon, Mo.App., 6 S.W.2d 60.

(5) A mere citation of the statute in the pleadings has been held to be insufficient to enable the court to take judicial notice thereof.—Smith v. Trimble-Compton Produce Co., 9 S.W.2d 865, 222 Mo.App. 777.

(6) Such a statute does not make applicable to a case any law which was not applicable before.—Menard v. Goltra, 40 S.W.2d 1053, 328 Mo. 368.

In Tennessee

(1) Under statute, the reviewing court can take judicial notice of the constitution and statutes of another state only when such laws are proved in the lower court.—Watkins v. Watkins, 22 S.W.2d 1, 160 Tenn. 1—Kaset v. Freedman, 120 S.W.2d 977, 22 Tenn.App. 213—Brown v. Hogan, 14 Tenn.App. 251—23 C.J. p 133 note 29 [b] (2).

(2) Where it appears that the statutes and cases appertaining thereto were read in evidence in the lower court, the reviewing court will take judicial notice thereof, as it is not necessary that they should be copied into the record.—Kaset v. Freedman, supra.

(3) Trial courts do not take notice of the laws of sister states, and such laws, when relied on, must be pleaded and proved.—Kennard v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 148 S.W.2d 1017.

the territory out of which a sister state was carved,[74] or that a certain state was not carved out of territory at any time governed by the English common law.[75] A state court may take judicial notice that the decisions of the United States supreme court would on a given date constitute the law of the land of a territory over whose courts it exercised appellate jurisdiction.[76]

Statutes in a number of jurisdictions require, or permit, the courts to take judicial notice of the unwritten law of other states.[77] Under some statutes, a proper pleading of the law of a sister state requires the court to take judicial notice, not only of the law itself, but also of judicial decisions of such state interpreting such law.[78] A statute providing that such law may be proved as a fact by parol evidence impliedly excludes judicial notice of it.[79]

§ 21. Laws of Foreign Country

In the absence of a statute to the contrary, courts do not take judicial notice of the laws of a foreign country.

matters of common knowledge,[81] the courts do not notice the details of such laws,[82] but sometimes they notice generally the source, basis, or foundation of the law of a foreign country,[83] or the fact that the law of such country on certain subjects differs from that of this country.[84] A statute providing that the law of a foreign country is to be determined by the court does not authorize the court to take judicial notice of foreign laws.[85] Under some statutes the courts may take judicial notice of the law of a foreign country whenever the same shall be material,[86] but in order to invoke the operation of such a statute the court's attention must be drawn to a statute, code, or other law of such foreign country.[87]

§ 22. Private Statutes

As a general rule, courts do not take judicial notice of private statutes.

In the absence of a constitutional or statutory provision to the contrary,[88] it is a general rule that private statutes of a state, as distinguished from public statutes, are not judicially noticed either by its own courts[89] or by any other courts,[90] and the same is true of private acts of congress.[91] If a statute of

81. Union of Soviet Socialist Republics

(1) It is common knowledge that private ownership of property has been abolished in the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, formerly known as Russia, with the result that none of its nationals there resident is permitted by its laws to have the personal control of any property, which is deemed to belong solely to the state.—In re Landau's Estate, 16 N.Y.S.2d 3, 172 Misc. 651.

a private nature contains a clause declaring it to be a public act, or if there is such a provision in a general law, it will be noticed by the courts as a public act.[92] Courts will also take judicial notice of a private statute which is recognized by a public act[93] or by the constitution,[94] or which is recognized and amended by a public act.[95]

§ 23. Legislative Resolutions

Legislative resolutions of a public character will be judicially noticed.

Courts take judicial notice of legislative resolutions of a public character,[96] but not of private resolutions.[97] By express statute courts are sometimes required to take judicial notice of "all" resolutions published by authority.[98]

§ 24. Laws and Customs of Indians

Except as otherwise continued in force by act of congress, Indian laws and customs are not judicially noticed.

Laws and customs of Indian tribes in the Indian Territory are judicially noticed so far as an act of congress continued them in force after a change in the form of government in that territory.[99] Otherwise the laws of the Indian tribes are not judicially noticed elsewhere than in the tribal courts, and in other courts are required to be pleaded and proved.[1]

§ 25. Law Merchant

Judicial notice will be taken of the law merchant.

Courts take judicial notice of the law merchant as part of the common law.[2] Accordingly, judicial notice will be taken of days of grace, and dies non juridicus, in connection with the presentment of negotiable paper for payment,[3] and the seal of a notary public.[4] Judicial notice, however, will not be taken of a "hussier" or bailiff, an officer exercising, under the local law of France, functions somewhat similar to those of a notary.[5]

§ 26. International, Admiralty, and Maritime Law

International and general maritime law are judicially noticed.

All courts have judicial knowledge of the rules established by the law of nations.[6] The public laws of a foreign nation, on a subject of common concern to all nations, promulgated by the governing powers of a country can be noticed as law by a court of admiralty of that country, and need not be still further proved as a fact.[7] Courts take judicial notice of the general maritime law,[8] including maritime regulations established in a particular country and accepted as obligatory by the principal commercial states of the world.[9] The rule, however, is otherwise where the maritime law of a foreign country is different from our own.[10] In other words it is not the duty or the right of a court of admiralty to take judicial notice of local changes made in the general admiralty law by any foreign nation.[11] It has also been held that the admiralty

§ 27. Municipal Ordinances or By-Laws

As a general rule, judicial notice is taken of municipal ordinances only by municipal courts or in appeals from such courts.

The general rule is that ordinances or by-laws themselves are not judicially known to courts having no special function to enforce them,[13] although the power of municipalities to pass ordinances or by-laws is judicially noticed by the courts within the state.[14] In this respect municipal ordinances are treated as being in the nature of, and on the same footing as, private statutes,[15] the statutes of sister states,[16] or the laws of a foreign country.[17] It necessarily follows that judicial cognizance cannot be taken of the amendment[18] or repeal[19] of a municipal ordinance. Judicial notice cannot be taken of an ordinance before its effective date,[20] and the court cannot properly assume to know the date on which an ordinance became effective as law.[21] However, judicial notice may be taken of a city ordinance where there is an admission of the existence thereof by counsel,[22] or where the existence of the ordinance is so generally known that the court may notice it as a matter of common knowledge.[23]

Under some statutes, courts will take judicial notice of municipal ordinances.[24] Some statutes require the courts to take judicial notice of the ordinances of a particular city or cities,[25] or of the ordinances of cities of a certain class,[26] or of any ordinance of a city or village which is pleaded by reference to its title and the date of its approval.[27] A statute not perfectly clear in its language will not be construed as intended to require the courts to take notice of municipal ordinances without proof of their existence.[28] A statute providing that printed and officially published copies of ordinances may be received in evidence without further proof does not authorize judicial notice of the ordinances.[29] Neither is judicial notice of the legislative acts of a city authorized or required by a statute providing that the courts will assume knowledge of the public and private official acts of the legislative, executive, and judicial departments of the state and of the United States.[30] A statute providing that a charter adopted in pursuance of the statutes carrying out the "home rule" provision of the constitution shall be judicially noticed does not authorize the courts to take judicial notice of city ordinances.[31] A statute providing that courts will take judicial notice of general ordinances of municipalities within the jurisdiction of the trial court are only applicable to the contents of such ordinances as facts when there is no question raised as to the legal existence or validity of the ordinances themselves.[32] A statute requiring judicial notice of general ordinances is inapplicable to ordinances special in their nature.[33]

Municipal courts. Although there is authority to the contrary,[34] it is generally held, sometimes by virtue of statute, that a municipal court will take judicial cognizance of the existence and substance of ordinances in force in the particular municipality.[35] Some courts consider it the imperative duty of municipal courts to take judicial notice of municipal ordinances,[36] while other courts consider it permissive but not obligatory.[37] Judicial notice will not be taken of ordinances or by-laws not enacted by the municipality, but by one of the departments thereof.[38]

Courts reviewing judgments of municipal courts. There is a conflict of authority on the question whether on appeal from a municipal court and trial de novo the appellate court will judicially notice municipal ordinances of which the court below was at liberty to take such notice, some courts holding that they will,[39] and others that they will not.[40] A like conflict exists in the case of a review on the record, some courts holding that they will take judicial notice,[41] and others that they will not.[42] Obviously an appellate court reviewing the judgment of a court not at liberty to take judicial cognizance of municipal ordinances is likewise restricted in that respect.[43]

In Illinois
(1) By virtue of statute, the reviewing court is required to take judicial notice of all matters of which an inferior court on trial of the case took judicial notice; and, consequently, the reviewing court must take judicial notice of city ordinances if the trial court has taken notice thereof.—American Tank & Installation Co. v. Rudolph Wurlitzer Co., 254 Ill.App. 514.
(2) Prior to the enactment of this statute the rule was to the contrary.—Chicago v. Cullen, 191 Ill.App. 97—Chicago v. Tearney, 187 Ill.App. 441.
In Ohio
(1) The text rule is now followed.—Bonbright v. Biller, 36 N.E.2d 173, 67 Ohio App. 421—Jackson v. Copelan, 198 N.E. 596, 50 Ohio App. 414—Strauss v. Conneaut, 23 Ohio Cir.Ct 320—Keck v. Cincinnati, 4 Ohio S. & C.P. 324, 3 Ohio N.P. 253.
(2) The reason for so holding has been stated as follows: "An ordinance, like a state statute, is matter of fact, except within the jurisdiction of its adoption. In the case at bar the ordinance was matter of law in the municipal court and by what transformation it could become matter of fact in the reviewing court is not apparent. If it was law in the trial court, it was law in the reviewing courts below, if it was law there, it is law here."—Orose v. Hodge Drive-It-Yourself Co., 9 N.E.2d 671, 673, 132 Ohio St. 607, 111 A.L.R. 954.

Terms

(1) It is common knowledge that usual terms of farm sale require buyer to pay cash or by bankable note.—Hirtz v. Koppes, 234 N.W. 854, 212 Iowa 536.

(2) Court, however, cannot judicially know what are terms of "customary commercial mineral lease."—Woods v. Rolls, Tex.Civ.App., 268 S.W. 988, affirmed Rolls v. Woods, Com.App., 291 S.W. 532.

(3) On the other hand, it is common knowledge that a mineral lease is granted by lessor with hope and expectation and with written consent to lessee to enter on property, erect derricks, tool houses, and all other necessary things to drill for and produce oil.—Shreveport Armature & Electric Works v. Harwell, La.App., 172 So. 463, followed in Bolinger Gain-Yay, Inc. v. Harwell, 172 So. 471.

Time for leasing

(1) The appropriate time to begin a rental contract for farm land in the state has been judicially noticed.—Penney v. Burns, 146 So. 611, 226 Ala. 273.

(2) It has been held, however, in the absence of a general custom to the contrary, that a court will not take judicial notice that the general time for the leasing of a certain class of buildings is in certain months of the year.—Wells & Newton Co. v. Lorence Realty Co., 167 N.Y.S. 916, 180 App.Div. 424.

Matters not of common knowledge

Acknowledgment

It is common knowledge that grantors or mortgagors sign and acknowledge deeds and mortgages.—Louisville Joint Stock Land Bank v. McNeely, 102 S.W.2d 389, 267 Ky. 425.

Interest

It may be regarded as common knowledge that interest on such notes is not usually paid in advance or before it is due.—McCarthy v. Simon, 142 N.E. 806, 247 Mass. 514.

Form

Court would not take judicial notice of form of mortgage used generally in Russell county.—Sorrells v. Cole, 173 So. 607, 234 Ala. 70.

Foreign standard clause

The court cannot judicially know the contents of a standard mortgage clause in another jurisdiction, at least in the absence of a statute prescribing its terms.—Tarrant Land Co. v. Palmetto Fire Ins. Co., 125 So. 807, 220 Ala. 428.

Corporation

The courts will take judicial notice that the business of supplying a community with gas or electricity for light, etc., is practically always conducted by a corporation.—Hansen v. Vallejo Electric Light & Power Co., 188 P. 999, 182 Cal. 492.

Natural monopoly

It is common knowledge that in most instances the supplying of natural gas for local distribution and consumption is a natural monopoly and that producing and dealing in natural gas is affected with a public interest. Interstate Natural Gas Co. v. Louisiana Public Service Commission, D.C.La., 33 F.Supp. 50.

Process involved

Courts know in a general way the process involved in the manufacture, storage, and distribution, of artificial gas.—Romano v. Birmingham Ry, Light & Power Co., 62 So. 677, 182 Ala. 335, 46 L.R.A.,N.S., 642.

Judicial notice has been taken:

(1) That telephone company does not take possession of message to be sent over its wires, and does not undertake to transmit messages for general public or for its subscribers.—Mentzer v. New England Telephone & Telegraph Co., 177 N.E. 549, 276 Mass. 478, 78 A.L.R. 654.

(2) That telephone company will, on request from "information," furnish free of charge the telephone number of a business subscriber like the Western Union.—Graves v. Northern N Y. Pub. Co., 22 N.Y.S.2d 537, 260 App.Div. 900, motion to dismiss appeal conditionally granted 32 N.E.2d 832.

(3) That there is a difference in costs between ocean cables and land lines.—Western Union Telegraph Co. v. State Board of Equalization, 7 P. 2d 551, 91 Mont. 310.

(4) That the right to maintain telephone lines is usually and customarily accompanied by the right to trim trees to prevent contact with the wires.—Chandler v. Gault, 194 N.W. 33, 181 Wis. 5.

(5) That two-wire method of construction eliminates inductive and conductive difficulty or so far controls it that interference with telephone lines from electric power line is negligible.—Ozarks Rural Electric Co-op. Corporation v. Oliphant, Ark., 144 S.W.2d 41.

Rates

While public service commission may take judicial notice of rates for telegrams on file with it, courts do not.—Wells v. Western Union Telegraph Co., Mo App., 262 S.W. 70.

procedure connected with the use of the telegraph;[66] that a telegraph is necessary for the operation of a railroad and usually consists of wires strung on posts set alongside the railroad,[67] but not the space that is required for the repair of such a line.[68] While the courts will take judicial knowledge as to the minimum charge made by telegraph companies in the state between given points, this rule cannot be extended so as to require them to take judicial notice of the volume of business conducted by a telegraph company at a particular telegraph office, or that the telegraph company and its agents have frugally conducted the business of the office, or that a particular agent of a telegraph company has acted with reasonable diligence in respect thereof.[69] The functions and duties of particular employees of telegraph companies have been judicially noticed.[70]

b. Agriculture

Matters of common knowledge relating to agriculture may be judicially noticed.

Courts take judicial notice of the general course of agriculture,[71] general customs obtaining among farmers,[72] and in a general way of what constitutes good husbandry[73] and good business policy on the part of farmers.[74] On the other hand, courts will not take judicial notice of matters concerning agriculture which are not matters of common knowledge.[75]

Judicial notice will also be taken of matters of common knowledge concerning the raising and marketing of farm products.[76] Within this rule are included judicial notice of facts of common knowledge relating to crops grown within the jurisdiction,[77] whether or not such crops are grown without planting every season,[78] and in a general way the time or season for the sowing or planting,[79] maturity,[80] and the gathering or harvesting of such crops,[81] and the total time covered or required;[82] but the court will not judicially notice the precise day a given crop reaches maturity, especially when it appears that the time of maturity varies,[83] nor will it take judicial notice of any particular day or time on which the pasturing season in any year terminates.[84] Within these general rules judicial notice has been taken of particular matters relating to cattle raising,[85] citrus fruit,[86] and of particular

Evidence to contrary

An appellate court will not use its judicial knowledge, if any, of the fact that no crops were made in a particular part of the country in a certain year as a basis for reversing a judgment or setting aside a verdict of the jury founded on evidence.—Lamar v. Hildreth, Tex.Civ.App., 209 S.W. 167.

Names

(1) Judicial notice is taken that names "National Bank" and "State Bank" may be used only by incorporated banks.—First Nat. Bank v. First State Bank of Jacksonville, Tex.Com.App., 291 S.W. 206, affirming, Civ.App., 269 S.W. 154.

(2) It is well known that a broader latitude has been allowed in matter of similarity of names in banking institutions than perhaps in ordinary commercial enterprises.—New York Trust Co. v. New York County Trust Co., 211 N.Y.S. 785, 125 Misc. 735, affirmed 212 N.Y.S. 882, 215 App. Div. 699.

5. Ind.—State v. Arnold, 38 N.E. 820, 140 Ind. 628.
23 C.J. p. 64 note 7.

Branch banks

It is a matter of common knowledge that in some states branch banks are the exception, and not the general rule.—Warren v. Commerce Union Bank, 274 S.W. 539, 152 Tenn. 67.

Making of chattel loans

It is matter of common knowledge, of which court takes judicial notice, that making of chattel loans is distinctively different sort of business in very many important particulars than that which is usual and customary in commercial banking and other forms of money loaning.—Austin v. City of Seattle, 30 P.2d 646, 176 Wash. 654, 93 A.L.R. 203.

Coöperative and savings banks

(1) Powers and functions of savings and loan society and savings bank are matters of common knowledge.—Baker v. Spokane Sav. Bank, C.C.A.Wash., 71 F.2d 487, affirming, D.C., 5 F.Supp. 538

(2) It is common knowledge that coöperative banks are largely dealt with by persons of small or moderate means as a method of accumulating savings.—Lowell Co-op. Bank v. Co-operative Central Bank, 191 N.E. 921, 287 Mass. 338.

National banks

(1) State supreme court judicially knows that national banks, organized and existing under laws of United States, are corporate entities.—Adler v. First Nat. Bank, 171 So. 904, 233 Ala. 325.

(2) It is judicially known that only banks charted by the United States may use the word "National" as part of the name.

The fact that a bank failure is a serious calamity to the entire community,[20] and facts relating to insolvent banks,[21] and that charters of banks may be extended from time to time indefinitely,[22] have also been judicially noticed.

Judicial notice will be taken of matters of common knowledge relating to the officers of a bank and their duties and powers,[23] but only if they are matters of common knowledge.[24]

Banking hours are judicially noticed.[25]

The courts cannot take judicial notice of the existence of a bank in any particular place, or in a given town,[26] or of the peculiar methods of business adopted by any bank.[27] A court has declined to take judicial notice of an alleged custom of banks to require prompt payment of notes at maturity or else to have them extended.[28]

taken of facts relating to railroads which are not matters of common knowledge.[45] Courts take judicial notice of the existence of established railroad routes generally known and used;[46] that railroad companies are common carriers[47] for hire;[48] that they transport not only passengers, but freight also, much of which is very heavy and difficult to handle;[49] that railroads must almost necessarily be operated by corporations and not by individuals;[50] and that a particular railroad is being operated by receivers.[51]

Because it is a matter of common knowledge, the fact is judicially known that the great railroad systems of the country are engaged in both interstate and intra-state commerce,[52] but it is not judicially known that any specific portion of the equipment or any particular employee of a railroad is engaged in interstate, rather than intra-state, commerce at any particular time and place.[53]

Courts are bound to know and judicially recognize the essential differences in the nature and modes of travel and transportation upon railroads and ordinary highways,[54] and the difference between steam railroads and street railroads,[55] as well as the difference between steam railroads and interurban electric railroads.[56]

Business methods, rates, and agreements. Courts take judicial notice of the manner in which ordinary railroad business is conducted;[57] of the customary practices and agreements by and between initial and connecting railroad carriers;[58] of the custom of railroads to carry children under one year of age free when accompanied by an adult passenger paying fare;[59] and of matters of common knowledge relating to tickets,[60] rates,[61] and regulation of railroads.[62] The courts, however, will not take judicial notice of a lease of the operating part of a railroad, although authorized by the state railroad commission under a statute.[63] The ownership of a particular track cannot be judicially known where the tracks of many independent companies lie in close proximity to each other.[64] The courts take judicial notice of the general custom of railroad companies to carry on their passenger trains, as the baggage of commercial travelers, trunks which, to the knowledge of the carrier, contain merchandise belonging not to the passenger but to his employer;[65] and they will also take judicial notice of restrictions and limitations if they are part of the general custom;[66] but they will not take judicial notice of restrictions which are not a part of the general custom but are placed thereon by a particular railroad company.[67] In some jurisdictions, judicial notice will not be taken of a schedule of rates filed by a carrier with the interstate commerce commission and published as required by law,[68] of an official classification of rates,[69] or of tariffs approved by the state railroad commission;[70] but in other jurisdictions notice will be taken of rates filed in accordance with federal laws,[71] and of reports and tariffs filed with the state railroad commission.[72] It has been held that courts do not take judicial knowledge of calculations necessary to ascertain a freight rate in accordance with the schedule.[73]

trains;[84] of facts of common knowledge as to the speed of trains;[85] and of the dangers incident to the operation of railroads, and the usual means taken to lessen them.[86] Although the court knows what a mixed or accommodation train is,[87] the make-up of particular trains and the movement of particular railroad cars are not matters which the court may assume to know without evidence.[88] While the time of arrival or departure of trains cannot be judicially noticed,[89] courts know that there are frequent departures from schedule time,[90] and that trains do not run at all times during any given twenty-four hours on any railroad in the state.[91]

Emission of sparks. Courts take judicial notice that locomotives emit sparks in sufficient quantities to communicate fire to combustible materials on which they happen to fall;[92] that the quantity of sparks emitted depends on a number of conditions;[93] that certain types of spark arresters are in general use on the railroads of the country;[94] and that no device has been invented or constructed which can wholly prevent a locomotive from throwing off live sparks under certain circumstances.[95] However, it has been held that since oil has come into use as a fuel it is not a matter of common knowledge that all locomotive engines emit sparks,[96] and one court, while taking judicial notice at a certain date that no spark arrester had been devised which would prevent a locomotive from throwing off live sparks,[97] at a later date declined to take judicial notice that such was the fact.[98] A court has refused to take judicial notice that electric locomotives are the best and safest for preventing fires.[99] While courts take judicial notice that a strong wind may carry sparks from a locomotive a considerable distance,[1] they do not take judicial notice of the exact distance that sparks from locomotives may or may not be carried.[2]

84. Judicial notice has been taken:
(1) Of practice of moving heavy trains with aid of pusher engine.—U. S. v. Chicago, St. P., M. & O. Ry. Co., D.C.Minn., 34 F.2d 812, affirmed, C.C.A., 43 F.2d 300, 71 A.L.R. 507.

Officers and employees. Judicial notice is taken of the respective and definite duties and authority of various officers and employees on railroad trains;[3] but only so far as such authority and duties are commonly known.[4] Judicial notice may be taken that private railroad policemen are exclusively creatures of state law.[5]

(3) Street Railroads

Judicial cognizance is taken of matters of common knowledge relating to street railroads.

Matters of common knowledge pertaining to street railroads will be judicially noticed,[6] but facts which are not matters of common knowledge will not be judicially noticed.[7] Accordingly, matters of common knowledge relating to the construction of street

(3) On the other hand, it has been held that court cannot take judicial notice of the duties required of, or performed by, brakeman in the service of a railroad company.—Gannaway v. Pitcairn, Mo.App., 109 S.W.2d 78.

Conductor

(1) It is a matter of common knowledge that the conductor is the person who has charge of the train, controls its movements, and is held responsible by the company for obedience to its rules and regulations.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Renfro, 135 S.W. 266, 142 Ky. 590, 33 L.R.A.,N.S., 133.

(2) Court takes judicial notice that passengers on train do not seek out conductor to tender fares, but that conductor invariably visits passenger and calls for fare.—Vanderbeck v. Chicago, M., St. P. & P. Ry. Co., 230 N.W. 390, 210 Iowa 230.

(3) That conductor of train has entire charge thereof, even to extent that it is his duty to enforce all rules applicable to other members of train crew and see that they perform their duties, is matter of common knowledge.—Hilton v. Southern Ry. Co., 7 S.E.2d 161, 192 S.C. 476.

(4) Other matters see 23 C.J. p 71 note 48 [c].

Dispatcher

Judicial notice may be taken that the train dispatcher is the officer having charge of trains' movements.

6. Operation by corporations

(1) It may be a fact within the scope of judicial cognizance that street railways are generally carried on by corporations.—Beaumont Tract. Co. v. State, 122 S.W. 615, 57 Tex. Civ.App. 605.

(2) The court will not judicially assume that no others than corporations are so engaged in the state.—Beaumont Tract. Co. v. State, supra.

Matters judicially noticed

(1) That automobiles have seriously affected earnings of street railroads.—Shreveport Rys. Co. v. City of Shreveport, D.C.La., 37 F.2d 910, affirmed, C.C.A., City of Shreveport v. Shreveport Ry. Co., 38 F.2d 945, 69 A.L.R. 340, certiorari denied 50 S.Ct 462, 281 U.S. 763, 74 L.Ed. 1172.

(2) That street railway systems for many years have been operated without operation of motor busses in connection.—Woodward v. City of Seattle, 248 P. 73, 140 Wash. 83.

(3) That white posts indicate street car stops.—McGrath v. Boston Elevated Ry. Co., 154 N.E. 89, 257 Mass. 541.

Overhead wires

While it is a matter of common observation that in the operation of electric street cars the trolleys frequently become detached from the overhead wire, courts do not judicially know that such mishaps are not preventable by mechanical contrivance.—Kirkpatrick v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 143 S.W. 865, 161 Mo.App. 515.

Ownership

Courts cannot take notice that a particular person or corporation owns or operates a street railway, or a particular line of steet railway, in a certain city.—El Paso Electric Ry. Co. v. Terrazas, Tex.Civ.App., 208 S.W. 387, error refused—23 C.J. p 72 note 55.

Service unnecessary

The court cannot take judicial notice that the maintenance of service on a certain route would be unnecessary and would result in congestion of the traffic.—Virginia Ry. & Power Co. v. City of Richmond, 106 S.E. 529, 129 Va. 592.

Revenues

Effect of period of price recession on revenues or net return of a street car company cannot be judicially noticed.—Galveston Electric Co. v. City of Galveston, Tex., 42 S.Ct. 351, 258 U.S. 388, 66 L.Ed. 678, affirming, D.C., Galveston Electric Co. v. City of Galveston, 272 F. 147.

car lines,[8] their equipment,[9] and operation[10] will be judicially noticed. Some[11] but not other[12] courts take judicial notice of the approximate distance within which a trolley car running at a certain rate of speed can be stopped.

e. Insurance

Matters of common knowledge appertaining to insurance will be judicially noticed.

The courts take judicial notice of the uniform and universal customs of insurance companies,[13] and of facts of common knowledge relating to insurance.[14] Accordingly judicial notice has been taken of such matters as the ordinary method and course of dealing by which parties procure insurance;[15] insurable interests;[16] matters concerning insurance rates;[17] and judicial notice has been taken of mat-

Assistance to applicants

It is common knowledge that insurance agents assist applicants in interpreting questions in applications and formulating answers thereto.—Purcell v. Washington Fidelity Nat. Ins. Co., 16 P.2d 639, 141 Or. 98.

Compensation

It will be judicially noticed:

(1) That all soliciting agents for life insurance companies work on commission basis.—Beasley v. Missouri State Life Ins. Co., 179 S.E. 777, 176 S.C. 156.

(2) That an agent receives the greater part of the first premium on life insurance.

Iowa.—Baker v. General American Life Ins. Co., 268 N.W. 556, 222 Iowa 184.

Payment in advance

It is a matter of common knowledge that:

(1) All insurance companies require payment of premiums in advance on bonds executed by them.—Bamberg County v. Maryland Casualty Co., 174 S.E. 917, 173 S.C. 106.

(2) Fire insurers extend credit for premiums, and that life insurers exact payment of premiums in advance.—Kansas City Life Ins. Co. v. Hammett, 149 So. 525, 177 La. 930.

(3) Insurance policies are delivered by insurance agents on payment of part cash and balance evidenced by notes of insured.—Commonwealth v. Sharp, 156 S.E. 570, 155 Va. 714.

Time and collection

(1) It is matter of common knowledge that premiums on life insurance policies are ordinarily paid annually or on an annual basis.—First Texas Prudential Ins. Co. v. Sorley, Tex.Civ.App., 272 S.W. 346.

(2) It is common knowledge that insurers of industrial life policies providing for weekly payments in small amounts frequently have their agents call on insured for collection of premiums which are paid in small sums.—Roseberry v. Home Life Ins. Co., 183 A. 121, 120 Pa. Super. 450.

Lack of knowledge

Courts should take common knowledge of the fact that beneficiaries in insurance policies are frequently unaware of the legal effect of steps taken by them in making proofs of loss.—Basham v. Prudential Ins. Co. of America, 113 S.W.2d 126, 232 Mo. App. 782.

Payment without litigation

Fla.—Auto Mut. Indemnity Co. v. Shaw, 184 So. 852, 134 Fla. 815.

Speedy and prompt settlement

Judicial notice will be taken of facts within common knowledge that make desirable speedy and prompt settlement by arbitration of fire insurance losses.—Hardware Dealers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co. of Wisconsin v. Glidden Co., 52 S.Ct. 69, 284 U.S. 151, 76 L.Ed. 214, affirming Glidden Co. v. Retail Hardware Mut. Fire Ins. Co of Minnesota, 233 N.W. 310, 181 Minn. 518, 77 A.L.R. 616.

34. Judicial notice will not be taken:

(1) Of business rivalry between groups of insurance companies in New York.—New York Life Ins. Co. v. Kaufman, C.C.A.Cal., 78 F.2d 398, certiorari denied 56 S.Ct. 149, 296 U. S. 626, 80 L.Ed. 445.

(2) Of the particular method of keeping books and records in the office of an insurance agent.—Coon v. Boston Ins. Co., 192 P. 1092, 79 Okl. 296.

(3) Of the public rating record which an insurance company is required by statute to maintain.—State ex rel. Agricultural Ins. Co. of Wa-

ing insurance policies may be judicially noticed, such as that insurance policies are but contracts of indemnity,[35] that many forms of insurance policies are on file with the insurance commissioner,[36] that ordinary life insurance policies have a loan value and are assignable,[37] that policies of insurance companies seldom contain identical terms or conditions,[38] that many policies contain a stipulation avoiding the policy for additional unauthorized insurance, while others do not, and that some require additional insurance,[39] that the abuse of attaching riders to policies varied,[40] and that fire insurance policies are generally issued for a term of at least one year.[41]

Matters of common knowledge as to the usual and customary terms of insurance policies,[42] such as forfeiture clauses,[43] or the requirements of reports to the insurer on the happening of events on which the insurer might be liable,[44] are judicially noticed. Standard forms of policies may be judicially noticed,[45] particularly where the terms of such policies are prescribed by statute.[46] On the other hand where the jury found that a fire policy did not contain certain provisions, the reviewing court will not take judicial notice to the contrary on the ground that the policy was a standard policy.[47] In the absence of a statute defining a standard policy for accident insurance, it is common knowledge that such policies are capable of many variations both as to the subjects of risks and other details by the use of what are commonly called "riders."[48]

Kinds of insurance. Judicial notice will be taken of the different kinds and forms of insurance, such as annuity contracts,[49] casualty insurance,[50] fraternal associations,[51] indemnity insurance,[52] industrial policies,[53] liability insurance,[54] life insurtertown, N. Y., v. Allen, Mo., 254 S. W. 194.

Characteristics of radio

It is a matter of common knowledge that a radio receiving set operated by electricity has no characteristics of dynamos, exciters, lamps, motors, or switches as those terms are used in an exclusion clause in a fire insurance policy.—Woods v. Great American Ins. Co., 265 Ill. App. 20.

43. In small type

It is common knowledge that generally forfeiture clauses in insurance policies are carefully prepared by insurer, inserted in policy in small type, and rarely if ever read by insured until after loss.—American Ins. Co. v. Millican, 153 So. 448, 26 Ala.App. 31, certiorari denied 153 So. 454, 228 Ala. 357.

23 C.J. p 76 note 73 [e].

(7) Stipulation for payment of attorney's fees in promissory note.—

the custom or usage is legal.[62] Conversely, courts will not take judicial notice of a custom which is unreasonable,[63] or which contravenes an established rule of law,[64] or of a usage which is purely local or of limited adoption.[65] Likewise, the court cannot take judicial notice of foreign customs.[66] A custom which is general among the merchants or business men of a large commercial city in the state may be judicially known by the courts of that state,[67] but not by the courts of other states.[68] By virtue of an act of congress local customs relative to the appropriation of water rights are judicially noticed.[69] Judicial notice has been taken of the custom as to demurrage charges in a particular port,[70] but a court has declined to take judicial notice of the custom of a particular port as to the discharge of a vessel.[71] Although it has been held that the court cannot take judicial notice of usages of particular trades,[72] it has also been held that the court will take notice of a general trade usage.[73]

Although a court will take judicial knowledge of a prevailing custom, it will not take judicial notice that in a particular transaction between private parties the custom was followed.[74]

Of religious organizations. Judicial notice is taken that it is a general custom among churches to keep a record of their official acts,[75] and that Seventh-Day Baptists do not work on Sunday.[76] On the other hand, judicial notice is not taken of customs of particular religious denominations, of limited application, such as the practice of the Episcopal Church as to the tenure of a parish minister,[77] whether a usage in Congregational churches requires a record to be made of the ordination of a minister,[78] or of the general organization and administration of the Methodist Episcopal Church.[79] The court cannot take judicial notice of the laws of Israel and the customs prescribed by the sages of the Hebrew race.[80]

§ 31. Established Standards of Care

Judicial notice will be taken of established standards of reasonable care.

The court will assume to know the standard which the community sets up as to reasonable care.[81] However, where the facts, although undisputed, do

§ 32. Geography and Geographical Facts

Geographical facts may be judicially noticed.

Courts may take judicial notice of geographical facts.[83] Courts have judicial knowledge of the prominent geographical features of the territory over which, or the state in which, they exercise jurisdiction,[84] of the country at large,[85] and of the rest of the world.[86] State courts take judicial notice of the general topography[87] and soil conditions[88] of the state. a. Lakes, Streams, and Mountains

Judicial notice is taken of the existence, location, and other facts of notoriety concerning prominent lakes, rivers, and mountains.

Among the geographical facts judicially noticed by the courts are the courses and character of the great rivers of the country.[97] Courts take judicial notice of the existence and location within the states in which they exercise jurisdiction of prominent lakes and rivers,[98] and courts will take ful whether judicial notice can be taken of the location of any particular bridge.[10]

Sometimes judicial notice is taken of the approximate width of a certain sound at a particular point within the state,[11] and that the topography of the state does not permit all of its inhabitants to be served with water by means of a single system of works.[12]

The tidal[13] or nontidal[14] character of certain bays, rivers, and streams, or parts thereof, is judicially noticed; but there is no law which requires the court to take judicial notice of the extent of the flow of the tide over blocks of land,[15] nor can the court know that any particular block is still subject to the ebb and flow of the tide.[16] While the court may take judicial notice of the general names and geographical positions of districts indicated on an admiralty map of the sea,[17] yet it will not, merely from an allegation that a vessel was near certain shoals which are in the high seas, take judicial notice that the vessel was at a particular time on the high seas rather than within the three-mile limit.[18]

Navigability. Courts take judicial notice of the navigability of streams constituting great national highways of commerce,[19] as well as the navigability[20] or nonnavigability[21] of smaller streams within the jurisdiction. Such matters are sometimes deemed to be common or general knowledge,[22] but judicial notice thereof is sometimes placed on the ground of historical knowledge[23] or statutory recognition.[24] The court may also take judicial notice that a lake within its jurisdiction is a navigable body of water.[25] On the other hand, unless the navigability of smaller streams is a matter of common knowledge,[26] if their status has not been so established by law the court cannot take judicial notice that they are navigable.[27] In the case of a river judicially known to be navigable, the precise point between its source and mouth at which navigability ceases, unless it is or ought to be within the realm of general knowledge, is not a subject of judicial notice but requires proof.[28]

Mountains and elevations. The existence, location, and elevation of prominent mountains in the jurisdiction[29] and of great mountain ranges[30] are judicially known. It is sometimes matter of common knowledge that in a certain part of the state elevations are commonly referred to as height above sea level[31] and are indicated in feet.[32]

b. Names, Location, and Boundaries

(1) Nation, states, and territories
(2) Political divisions

(1) Nation, States, and Territories

Judicial notice may be taken of the name, location, and boundaries of the nation, states, and territories.

The boundaries of the United States are judicially known by the federal courts,[33] and a state court will take judicial notice of the boundaries of the United States, at least where they coincide with the state line.[34] Courts take judicial notice of the name of the state,[35] and of the established boundaries of the state[36] or territory,[37] where they are sitting or over which they exercise jurisdiction, and also know that a certain tract or region is[38] or is not[39] included therein. State courts judicially know the location of the sister states of the Union,[40] and of a territory.[41] They know that Alaska is a part of the United States,[42] and that the boundary lines of Oregon territory were finally settled to be the forty-second parallel on the south and the forty-ninth on the north.[43] The creation of a new state out of territory of a preëxisting state is judicially noticed.[44]

(2) Political Divisions

(b) Counties and county seats

diction, but such notice will generally not be taken of such divisions in other states.

Courts judicially know the geographical position and extent of the political divisions of the government within which they exercise jurisdiction,[45] whether these divisions exist for election purposes[46] or for the direct administration of governmental functions.[47] Except where the fact can be noticed as a matter of common knowledge, a state court has no judicial knowledge that a named political division exists in another state or territory,[48] unless it is a county or other political division of a parent state and was created before the separation.[49]

Location of privately owned lands with regard to political divisions is not as a general rule judicially noticed,[50] but it is otherwise if such location is connected with, or involved in, a matter of a public nature,[51] such as a public survey, see infra § 53.

(b) Counties and County Seats

Courts take judicial notice of geographical facts relating to counties.

Courts judicially notice geographical facts relating to counties,[52] the date of their organization[53] where they are directly created by public acts of the legislature[54] rather than by acts in pais,[55] their names,[56] geographical position,[57] location,[58] relative positions in the state,[59] geographical shape,[60] boundaries,[61] and area.[62] If the county boundaries and the location of a place within the county are judicially known, a point at a given distance from that place may be judicially known to be inside the county limits;[63] or the court may judicially know that the place is not certainly within the county.[64] On the other hand, a court has declined to take judicial notice that a point a certain distance from a particular city is within a particular county.[65]

Official surveys being judicially noticed, a described section or range may be judicially known to be in a particular county, see infra § 53, but, unless a subject of statutory recognition,[66] the court cannot take judicial notice that a particular piece of land is within a certain county.[67]

County seats. The identity and location of particular county seats are judicially known to the courts.[68] Likewise, judicial notice will be taken that a particular town is not a county seat.[69]

(c) Cities and Villages

Judicial notice will be taken of cities within the state and of prominent cities outside the state.

Courts of states and territories take judicial notice of the cities[70] and boroughs[71] therein, although incorporated under a preceding government;[72] their names;[73] their location[74] as within the state

ute,[84] and, in jurisdictions where township lines are not noticed, a city is not judicially known to be in a particular township.[85] Likewise, whether a city is in a particular precinct of the county will not be judicially noticed.[86]

Wards are not judicially noticed by courts of general jurisdiction,[87] unless such subdivisions are directly established by a public law.[88] However, a local court may judicially know that a city where it sits or within its jurisdiction contains a certain number of wards.[89] The court cannot judicially know that on a specified date a certain ward of a particular city constituted one election district.[90]

Courts cannot take judicial notice that particular points or localities are within or without the boundaries of a municipal corporation.[91]

State courts judicially know the location of cities outside the state where they are well-known,[92] but it has been held that the court cannot take judicial notice of the location of a town in another state[93] or whether a particular point is part of such a city.[94] The situation of such cities as related to tidewater is also judicially noticed.[95] The location of a city in a foreign country has also been judicially noticed.[96]

Villages. Judicial notice will be taken of the existence of villages in the state,[97] their names,[98] and their location in respect of other municipalities,[99] or as being in a particular town or township[1] or county.[2] The fact that a village is located on a certain railroad has also been judicially noticed.[3]

(d) Townships and Districts

It is generally held that courts will take judicial notice of the names, location, and boundaries of townships and districts.

Courts take judicial notice of the statutory division of a state into towns or townships;[4] their names[5] and numbering;[6] their location[7] and area;[8] and their boundaries, where the precise boundaries are declared by law,[9] but not where they are made and unmade at the discretion of county courts.[10]

Where it is provided by statute that in each township there shall also be a school township of the same name of the civil township, except that the word "school" shall precede the name, and it is conceded or established that there is in a certain county a township of a certain name, the court will take judicial notice that there is also in that county a school corporation of a similar name.[11]

Districts. Judicial notice has been taken of the boundaries of bridge districts,[12] an election district,[13] irrigation district,[14] forest preserve district,[15] and school district.[16] The court cannot take judicial notice of the boundary lines of supervisor's districts.[17] Ordinarily the court does not know judicially the boundaries of a road improvement district;[18] but, where the statute creating the district specifies the boundaries of the district and the roads to be improved, the court will take cognizance judicially of the location of the sections of land in their relation to each other.[19] Judicial notice of judicial districts is discussed in § 46 infra.

Where a precinct forming a subdivision of a county is set off and established by the county court, and its boundaries are subject to change by that body, the court cannot take judicial notice of such boundaries at any given time.[20]

c. Blocks and Lots, Streets, and Street Numbers

Unless recognized by statute, or a matter of common knowledge, judicial notice is not taken of blocks and lots, streets, and street numbers in cities and towns.

The courts know that cities are divided into blocks, lots, streets, and alleys.[21] The particularity, however, of the knowledge called for in order that the court may judicially know the location of streets, their width, direction, numbering, etc., is so great, and the facilities of various courts for acquiring such knowledge are so different, that much diversity of decision exists on the point. Courts have declined to take judicial notice of city streets,[22] including such facts as their names,[23] location,[24] direction,[25] or width;[26] or of their relation to each other,[27] such as the distance between such streets,[28] or of the location of an alley,[29] or of an intersection of certain streets or avenues.[30] The court likewise cannot take judicial cognizance of the conditions of the streets of a city, or the extent to which abutting land is developed in any section, or the public necessities at any given place on a given street.[31] Sometimes, however, judicial notice is taken of streets in prominent cities of the state or in cities within the jurisdiction of the court,[32] of the names,[33] location,[34] general direction,[35] and relation to each other[36] of such streets, and of their character as public highways[37] and business streets,[38] if such is the fact. Judicial knowledge of this kind is generally limited to long established and well-known streets and is not extended to those less commonly known.[39]

In business district
(1) It has been held that the

The court will not take judicial notice of the amount of travel on a street from the mere name of the street.[40] Of course a court cannot judicially know anything about a named street in the absence of any evidence that it is in a town, city, or county of the state, or even in the state.[41] Courts do not take judicial notice of a negative such as that there are not in a certain city any alleys having sidewalks.[42]

The system of numbering employed in New York City is judicially noticed by courts sitting in that city,[43] but in other jurisdictions the courts decline to take judicial notice of the particular place or locality designated by a street or lot number.[44] Where all of a certain street is by statute included in a stated judicial district, judicial notice will be taken that a designated number on that street is within the district;[45] but it is otherwise if the street is not wholly within the district.[46] The court may also take judicial notice of matters of common knowledge in the community where it sits, such as the relative positions of street numbers and street corners in well-known portions of the city.[47] Judicial notice has been taken that a particular lot is within the territorial limits of a particular city.[48]

Plats. The courts do not ordinarily take judicial notice of maps, plats, or surveys of lots and blocks in streets and cities,[49] or of the contents thereof,[50] or of the relative situation of lots and blocks as shown thereon;[51] but, where a plan has been approved by statute, the courts judicially know the lo-court will not take judicial notice that a designated street intersection is in the business district of a city.—Columbia Taxicab Co. v. Mercurio, Mo.App., 236 S.W. 1096.

cation of streets as platted thereon,[52] and the relation of such streets to one another, and the directions in which they run,[53] but not the correct location on the ground of the streets therein platted.[54] Facts of common knowledge relating to city plats may be judicially noticed,[55] but facts relating to such plats which are not otherwise entitled to be judicially noticed and which are not matters of common knowledge will not be noticed.[56]

d. Place Named but Not Otherwise Described

Although a county or city named but not otherwise described may be inferred to be the county or city wherein the court is sitting, generally a court will not judicially notice that a place merely designated by name is within or without the state.

A county designated by name, without reference to any state, will be judicially inferred to be the county of that name in the state where the court sits.[57] A like rule is usually,[58] although not invariably,[59] applied in the case of a named city or town. On the other hand, a court cannot judicially know whether a place designated by name, its corporate character not being mentioned, is either within[60] or without[61] the state.

e. Distance and Time of Travel or Transportation between Places

Courts may take judicial knowledge of the distance and time of travel or transportation between places.

Judicial knowledge of geographical facts frequently enable courts judicially to know, with sufficient accuracy for their purpose in the instant case, the distance between places within or without their territorial jurisdiction,[62] particularly where such distances are established by law,[63] or fixed by public surveys,[64] and in many cases courts have taken cognizance of the length of time consumed in travel or carriage of goods between places by present modes of conveyance.[65] It has been held, however, that judicial notice cannot be taken of the precise distances between different places in counties.[66]

56. Particular numbered tract
The courts cannot take judicial notice that a particular county is the only county within the state having a certain numbered tract subdivided or a map book numbered in a certain manner.—Saterstrom v. Glick Bros., Sash Door & Mill Co., 5 P.2d 21, 118 Cal.App. 379.

f. Existence and Location of Public Means of Transportation

The existence and location of public means of transportation may be judicially noticed.

The courts will judicially notice the existence of public transportation systems between different cities within the state.[67] As a fundamental fact of general knowledge a court knows of the existence and location of railroads,[68] whether they are wholly within its jurisdiction,[69] or only partly so,[70] and knows to what system, if any, they belong.[71] On the other hands, courts have refused to take judicial notice that certain railroads run through certain states,[72] that a railroad is doing business in another state,[73] and that certain railroads are competitive.[74] Courts will also, to a not very well defined extent, notice the minor facts connected with railroad locations in their jurisdiction.[75] Thus it has been held that the courts may know that railroads are in operation between two places,[76] that these points are within a certain county,[77] especially if they are post offices,[78] the geographical positions of towns on the line of a railroad,[79] and that a railroad cannot be located in a given direction from one place to another without passing through a third.[80] In like manner courts will notice that a town contains a station on a certain railroad,[81] or that it is a railroad center,[82] or that a certain city in the state is not on a railroad.[83] Courts, however, cannot notice more minute facts.[84] Neither can they notice matters in futuro.[85] Although some courts take notice of stations,[86] other courts decline to do so.[87] Courts have both taken[88] and declined to take[89] judicial notice of the termini of railroads.

Terminal connection

Conceding that a court may take judicial notice of the location, routes, and termini of the lines of an important railroad, it must include in such notice every part of the system, and the fact, if it be a fact, that it performs the service of a terminal connection for other roads in moving their cars to their ultimate point of destination in a city.—U. public buildings,[90] the state prison,[91] and of an Indian reservation.[92] Judicial notice is also taken of facts of common knowledge relating to the location of public school buildings.[93] While the courts take judicial notice generally of the present existence and location of schoolhouses as being within a certain number of miles of a particular place of business in a city,[94] they do not take notice of the former existence and location of a particular schoolhouse in a certain town in the state.[95]

§ 34. Government and Its Administration

Judicial notice will be taken of general matters relating to government and its administration.

Judicial notice is taken of the division of government into three branches or departments, namely, legislative, executive, and judicial,[96] of the public official acts of the coördinant branches of the same government,[97] and, generally speaking, of the records thereof and their contents.[98] Consequently statutes expressly requiring judicial notice of public and private official acts of the legislative, executive, and judicial departments of the state and of the United States are merely declaratory of the preëxisting rule on the subject, except for the added provision for notice of private official acts.[99]

Public activities within the common experience of men within the jurisdiction are judicially known,[1] and a wide variety of matters relating to government and its administration has been judicially noticed,[2] including facts relating to public institu-

(2) This notice includes notice of grants of mineral rights to defend-committees, and administrative bodies,[31] at least to the extent that such records are required by law.[32] In determining the question of the validity of the expenditure of public officers, the court may take judicial notice of the public records of such officers.[33] In some jurisdictions the courts do not take judicial notice of records in the county recorder's office,[34] or of such facts concerning them as that they have been destroyed by fire.[35]

Judicial notice may be taken of matters of common knowledge relating to the manner of keeping public records.[36]

Judicial knowledge is confined to the record when an official act of the executive department is called in question, and such record is authentic and complete in itself.[37] The court has no power to take judicial knowledge of a state of facts existing in pais that will destroy a public record and leave the public officers, whose duty it is to make records of the transactions of their offices, under suspicion of fraudulent conduct.[38]

Judicial notice of judicial records is discussed infra § 50.

§ 37. Officers and Official Position and Authority

Judicial notice will be taken of public officers and official position and authority within the jurisdiction of the court.

It has been declared that a court is presumed to know all public officers in civil affairs within its jurisdiction.[39] The authority of public officers as prescribed by the constitution or a public statute is judicially known to the courts.[40] Where, however, the burden of the action is usurpation of judicial power, no basis exists for taking judicial notice of the law imposing the duties.[41] The increase of responsibilities of the state executive officers since the framing of the state constitution has been judicially noticed.[42]

Judicial notice of judges, justices, and court officials will be hereinafter considered in § 48.

The establishment, under federal laws, of labor forums for the equitable adjustment of labor disputes has been judicially noticed.[43]

Location or residence. Judicial notice may be taken, where such is the case, that a federal administrative body is located in the District of Columbia,[44] and that the official residence of a federal officer is in the District of Columbia.[45] Likewise, state courts may take judicial notice that certain state officers are located in the state capital.[46]

Federal officers. The courts take judicial notice of the powers and duties of the president of the United States.[47] They judicially know who is or was the executive head of the United States;[48] the principal officers of state in the national government;[49] the heads of departments and of bureaus therein,[50] and their chief subordinates;[51] the permanent[52] or pro tempore[53] commissioner of patents; the commissioner of the general land office,[54] his pro tempore substitute,[55] and principal subordinate officials;[56] the personnel of the United States tariff commission;[57] the collector of internal revenue and his deputy;[58] the comptroller of the currency or a deputy acting as comptroller,[59] and facts of common knowledge concerning his agents;[60] and United States consuls.[61] The federal courts also have power to take judicial notice of the official capacities of certain individuals as officers and employees of the United States,[62] as well as the extent of their authority and the scope of their duties.[63]

representation may be judicially noticed.[64]

State officers and boards. It is well settled that the courts of the state take judicial notice of the public officers of the state and the source of their authority.[65] The courts of a state judicially know who is, or was at any time, the chief executive thereof,[66] or of any government formerly exercising sovereignty therein.[67] Both state[68] and federal[69] courts take judicial notice of the secretary of state. Other officials,[70] whether appointed by the executive[71] or elected by the legislature,[72] and even an incumbent of an office at a remote date,[73] have been judicially recognized, such as state agents,[74] attorneys-general,[75] state auditors,[76] auditors general and other deputies,[77] tax officials,[78] registers of the land office,[79] commissioners of excise,[80] bank commissioners,[81] insurance commissioners,[82] commissioners of deeds,[83] and notaries.[84] The date of accession to office,[85] the term of office[86] and expiration thereof,[87] and the salary paid[88] are likewise noticed. Some,[89] but not other,[90] courts take judicial notice of de facto state officers.

The creation of a state board will be judicially noticed.[91] A state board created and named by statute will be judicially noticed apart from the titles to office of its individual members.[92] The fact that certain state officials are, by virtue of their office, members of certain state boards will be judicially noticed.[93] Judicial notice may be taken that a certain board is a state bureau, and that the officers thereof are public officers, making its employees state employees.[94] While the court may judicially know that a certain person is, and has been for some time, secretary of a state commission, yet it cannot know that he was secretary at an unknown time when certain certificates were made.[95]

County officers. Judicial notice is taken of county administrative officers within the jurisdiction of the court,[96] such as auditors,[97] board of education,[98] commissioners,[99] coroner,[1] health officer,[2] supervisors,[3] registers,[4] jail keepers,[5] tax collectors and other tax officials,[6] and treasurers.[7] The court will not take judicial notice of the number or salaries of assistant county officers where these matters depend on the needs of the county and the action of certain state or county officials.[8]

City and town officers. Matters prescribed by statute or which are of common knowledge relating to the official position and authority of city and town officers and employees may be judicially noticed.[9] The courts will know judicially the principal executive officers of a city or town,[10] its trustees,[11] and the legal powers of municipal officers.[12] A county court should judicially know who is, or who was at any time, the mayor of a city in the county,[13] the persons holding the office of city clerk in the various cities within the county in which the court is held,[14] and the official character as city collector of one to whom a warrant for the collection of a special assessment had been issued.[15] Some appellate courts decline to take judicial notice of the officers of a municipal corporation,[16] but in other jurisdictions such notice has been taken.[17] The first officers of a municipality under a former government are sometimes judicially noticed as a matter of history.[18]

Judicial notice may be taken of matters of common knowledge relating to city employees,[19] such as firemen[20] and relating to city employees such as

Assessors

(1) Supreme court takes judicial notice of duties of board of assessors prescribed by statute.—Bistor v. Board of Assessors of Cook County, 179 N.E. 120, 346 Ill. 362, 78 A.L.R. 686.

(2) Court judicially knows that term of office of assessor expired on a certain date.—Couch v. Earnest, Tex.Civ.App., 62 S.W.2d 988, error dismissed.

7. Pa.—Rauch v. Commonwealth, 78 Pa. 490.

Book supplied

It is common knowledge that county treasurers as a rule are supplied with a permanent book in which omitted property is listed and assessed and taxes levied.—Bennett v. Finkbine Lumber Co., 198 N.W. 1, 199 Iowa 1085.

Duty to account

Court will take judicial notice that retiring county treasurer has duty to account for and turn over to successor all money received in official capacity during his term of office less such as is legally paid out.—City of Bisbee v. Cochise County, 36 P.2d 559, 44 Ariz. 233, followed in City of Douglas v. Kitchel, 36 P.2d 564, 44 Ariz. 246.

Sufficiency of room furnished

The court will not take judicial notice that the room furnished a county treasurer was insufficient.—Buchanan v. Ralls County, 222 S.W. 1002, 283 Mo. 10.

8. Ill.—People v. Chicago & E. I. R Co., 118 N.E. 2, 281 Ill. 177.

9. N.Y.—Veronica Realty Corporation v. Cranford-Locher, Inc., 267 N.Y.S. 443, 149 Misc. 428.

Municipal clerk

The supreme court judicially knows that the municipal clerk is not only the city's clerical officer, but is the custodian of all of its books, records, and papers, and that part of his duties is to keep the governing officers of the city informed concerning those records and papers —City of Aberdeen v. Bank of Amory, Miss., 2 So.2d 153.

Salaries and fees

It is a matter of common knowledge that cities have salaried officers whose services are at the disposal of the city, while the clerks of towns as a class are persons engaged in their own business, and receive little if any, salary for their official duties beyond their statutory fees.—O'Brien v. City of Manchester, 152 A. 720, 84 N.H. 492.

10. Particular officers

(1) Personnel of school board.—Union School Dist. of City of Saginaw v. Council of City of Saginaw, 206 N.W. 573, 232 Mich. 639.

(2) Street commissioners.—St. Louis v. Greely, 14 Mo.App. 578.

(3) Superintendents of streets and their deputies —Himmelmann v. Hoadley, 44 Cal. 213.

11. Trustees

(1) Judicial notice will be taken of the trustees of a town or township.—Inglis v. State, 61 Ind. 212.

(2) Court will take judicial notice of regular meetings of board of council of towns, and that a meeting was a regular meeting, although minutes denominated it "first called meeting."—Town of Nortonville v. Woodward, 231 S.W. 224, 191 Ky. 730.

(3) Courts judicially know that township trustee has charge of many public records, documents, and papers which are matters of public concern, and which public may seasonably demand right to inspect.—Marion Tp. of Boone County v. Howard, 147 N.E. 619, 196 Ind. 167, followed in Jackson Tp. of Boone County v. Bowman, 147 N.E. 621, 196 Ind. 729.

Danger

It is common knowledge that a superintendent of highways is constantly called on to perform hazardous duties.—Dann v. Town of Veteran, 5 N.Y.S.2d 997, 254 App.Div 462, affirmed 17 N.E.2d 130, 278 N Y. 461, reargument denied 18 N.E.2d 697, 279 N.Y. 760.

Experts

It is common knowledge that for years experts have been employed by departments of city of New York, and no question raised as to payment of their compensation.—Buck v. City of New York, 216 N.Y.S. 128, 127 Misc. 354.

Steward and chef

It is common knowledge that duties of steward and chef are different.—Dykstra v. State, 181 N E. 488, 42 Ohio App. 141.

policemen.[21]

§ 38. Official Signatures and Seals

Official signatures and seals of federal, state, and local officers will be judicially noticed within their respective jurisdictions.

The signature of a public officer, within the jurisdiction, to any document required to be signed by him in his official capacity will be judicially noticed,[22] and it has been declared that the court will take judicial notice of the official capacity of the signer, even though it is not shown by the writing.[23] In order to be judicially noticed, a foreign seal must be the great seal of a state, or at least the seal of the secretary of state attesting the seal and official character of the official signing.[24] Accordingly courts are not authorized to take judicial notice of, or notice of the genuineness of, signatures of minor officers of foreign countries,[25] or the seal of a city in another state and the signature of its registrar and recorder.[26]

Federal officers. State and federal courts judicially notice the official signatures and seals of the president of the United States,[27] and of other important federal officers, such as the heads of the various departments of the federal government and their chief subordinate officers,[28] commissioners of patents,[29] or consuls and their deputies.[30]

State officers. State courts judicially know the great seal of their own state,[31] the signature and official seal of any governor of the state,[32] of the heads of departments,[33] and of other state officers and agents.[34]

County and city officers. State courts take judicial notice of the signatures and seals of county executive officers,[35] and the signatures of their deputies appointed by statutory authority and acting for them.[36] Signatures of leading city officers are held to be subjects of judicial notice.[37]

§ 39. Administrative Rules and Regulations

Administrative rules and regulations of the federal and state executive departments, and of the well known administrative bodies, will be judicially noticed.

State courts take judicial notice of the rules of federal executive departments,[38] the rules and regulations of federal boards and commissions,[39] and regulations of the United States army.[40] Minor administrative rules and regulations such as the causes for which admission will be granted into a veteran's hospital, will not be judicially noticed.[41]

State courts may take judicial notice of the rules and regulations of the various departments of the state government,[42] and regulations of considerable notoriety established by important state boards and commissions,[43] and even of rules and regulations of administrative bodies set up by municipalities, where they are well known.[44] Sometimes judicial notice is taken of certain rules on the ground that they have the force and effect of statutes,[45] or that they were adopted pursuant to statutory authority,[46] or because they have become subjects of common knowledge.[47] On the other hand, sometimes due to the circumstances of the particular case,

U.S.—Verde River Irrigation & Power Dist. v. Salt River Valley Water Users' Ass'n, C.C.A.Ariz, 94 F.2d 936.

Under statute requiring judicial notice of the public and official acts of the executive departments of the United States, if the comptroller's of a state,[66] and the public acts, practice, and proceedings of other officers or boards, including local or inferior officers or boards.[67] Judicial notice of such acts, however, is usually confined to such acts as are of general public interest[68] or as are matters of common knowledge,[69] and the courts decline to notice judicially the acts of inferior officers of purely local interest,[70] and even the executive acts of high officials where they are of slight general importance.[71] Likewise, unless such facts are matters of common knowledge, and in the absence of a statute to the contrary, courts do not take judicial notice of the acts of governmental officials with respect to particular transactions,[72] nor is notice taken of the details or manner in which a state officer performs the various duties of his office.[73] While courts do not take judicial notice of the modes by which executive officers carry into effect a public statute,[74] nor whether a particular official act was properly done,[75] the regular course of business in and practice of the great executive departments or bureaus of the national or of the state government, including the long continued practical construction given by them to statutes governing their action, have much the force of unwritten law and may become so notorious as to be judicially known to the courts.[76]

tice that public officers have not performed their duties.[77] In accordance with the rules already considered in § 13 as to discretion in the use of judicial notice, courts ordinarily are not required to take notice of the actions of local boards.[78]

Drainage district. When a drainage district is asserting legal rights it stands no higher than an individual, and the court will not take judicial notice of its proceedings other than those relating to its incorporation.[79]

Officers of sister state. Judicial notice is not ordinarily taken of the acts of an officer of a sister state.[80]

§ 41. Official Proclamations, Messages, and Orders

Courts may take judicial notice of official proclamations, messages, and orders of the president of the United States and of the governor of the state.

Courts take judicial cognizance of proclamations[81] and orders[82] issued by the chief executive. Thus courts take judicial notice of the proclamation of the president of the existence of a state of war between the United States and a foreign country;[83]

tion;[96] or establishing a cattle quarantine.[97] The courts of a state take judicial notice of official messages issued in the exercise of the constitutional authority of the executive;[98] but federal courts do not take judicial notice of facts stated in reports or messages of a governor to the state legislature.[99]

Judicial notice is taken of a proclamation of general amnesty[1] or of pardon and amnesty,[2] but not of a mere pardon by the executive.[3]

Judicial notice will be taken of a proclamation of the United States secretary of state that the requisite number of states have ratified an amendment to the federal constitution.[4]

Rules, regulations, and orders of administrative bodies are discussed supra § 39.

Military commander. Some courts decline to take notice of the various orders issued by a military commander in the exercise of the authority conferred on him,[5] but other courts take judicial notice of general rules of commanding officers acting as military governors.[6] Secret confidential orders of the chief military censor are not judicially noticed.[7]

Orders of boards of county commissioners. An order of a board of county commissioners, made pursuant to statutory authority, is a matter of which courts in that county will not take notice unless it is proved as other facts must be proved.[8]

§ 42. Official Bulletins, Reports, and Correspondence

As a general rule, sometimes by virtue of statutory provision, judicial notice is taken of public documents,[9] which may consist of such matters as reports of the federal and state executive departments,[10] official bulletins and publications,[11] and reports of a general public interest of other public

"But the authorities relied upon by appellant to prove the impropriety of taking judicial notice of a government publication issued by a department of the government are not in point. They refer to courts, which do not profess to be informed on various specialized subjects, and not to administrative agencies which are experts in their own fields. It is certainly reasonable for the Secretary of Agriculture to take judicial notice of one of his own department's publications, and to base his findings of fact on such notice."—A. J. Conroy, Inc., v. Weyl-Zuckerman & Co., D.C.Cal., 39 F.Supp. 784, 787.

Bulletins of federal pure food commissioner, however, have been held not to be subject to judicial no-

officers, committees, and administrative bodies,[12] at least where such reports are made and published by authority of law,[13] or have been adopted by state statute.[14] The fact that certain public officers make reports may also be judicially noticed.[15] Some federal courts have declined to take judicial notice of particular facts set out in state publications.[16]

§ 43. Legislative Department in General

Courts may take judicial notice, as a general rule, of legislative journals, and of other facts of common knowledge or of law relating to the legislative department.

The journals of the two houses of congress are judicially noticed by both federal and state courts.[17] Senate documents may be judicially noticed.[18] Notice has also been taken of matters being considered by congress,[19] and that a present determined policy of congress is one of economy.[20] Judicial notice is also taken of reports of commissions to congress and proceedings thereon.[21]

Of state. State and federal courts judicially recognize the existence of a state legislature.[22] Courts judicially know when the state legislature is in session,[23] the length and time of sessions,[24] the time tice.—Commonwealth v. Kephart, 35 Pa.Co. 337.

File wrapper of patent is not a subject of judicial notice.—Gatch Wire Goods Co. v. W. A. Laidlaw Wire Co., C.C.A.Ill., 108 F.2d 433.

Geodetic surveys

The court will resort to publications issued by the department of commerce describing and delineating the United States coast and geodetic surveys.—Boone v. Kingsbury, 273 P. 797, 206 Cal. 148, followed in 274 P. 61, 206 Cal. 791, Shudde v. Kingsbury, 274 P. 61, 206 Cal. 792, Workman v. Kingsbury, 274 P. 62, 206 Cal. 793, Hickey Bros. Co. v. Kingsbury, 274 P. 63, 206 Cal. 797, appeal dismissed and certiorari denied Workman v. Boone, 50 S.Ct. 66, 280 U.S. 517, 74 L.Ed. 587, 588.

Index numbers of wholesale prices of United States department of labor may be judicially noticed.—Town of Mamaroneck v. New York Interurban Water Co., 212 N.Y.S. 639, 126 Misc. 382.

Statement by private citizen

A statement made in a bulletin issued by the office of experiment stations of the United States department of agriculture, by a private citizen on his own initiative and not at the instance of the government, that the scientific name of the plant from which the merchandise in issue comes was euryale ferox, has no evidentiary value, and is not admissible in evidence to prove such fact. If the plant was scientifically known as euryale ferox, it was necessary to prove it as any other fact, it not having been shown to have a name of which the court may take judicial notice.—Doap Leun Hong Co. v. when a particular session thereof terminated,[25] and the number of regular and special sessions between two dates;[26] and they know in a general way who constitute its members,[27] as well as the number composing the different branches.[28] Judicial notice will also be taken that members of the general assembly have taken an oath to support the state constitution.[29] The court may also take judicial notice of the action or lack of action of the legislature.[30] The practice of the legislature of passing many bills in the closing hours of the session has been judicially noticed.[31] Judicial notice is not taken that a particular person is privileged from arrest because he is a member of the legislature.[32] The court has no judicial knowledge whether or not there are proper and legitimate modes of expending money in procuring the passage of an act of the legislature.[33]

Judicial notice has been taken of the appointment,[34] existence,[35] and the reports[36] of legislative committees; but some courts have declined to take judicial notice of such reports.[37]

Journals of the legislature being not only the official records of a coördinate branch of government kept under requirement of law, but also important as bearing on the validity and meaning of statute law which it is the function of courts to know and enforce are, according to the weight of authority, judicially noticed by the courts.[38] In a few jurisdictions the rule is to the contrary, or tends to the

When judicial notice is taken of the senate journal the court, in order to acquire knowledge of its contents, may examine original journal, copy thereof certified to by its custodian, or copy thereof published under statute.—Witherspoon v. State, 103 So. 134, 138 Miss. 310.

contrary.[39] When collaterally involved in litigated cases, legislative journals impart absolute verity, and judicial notice cannot extend further than the journals themselves.[40] On the other hand, in jurisdictions where judicial notice of legislative journals is taken, it extends not only to the contents of such journals,[41] but also to their existence and function in legislation,[42] their printing, publication, and distribution,[43] and the fact that they are kept in compliance with the law.[44] Judicial notice may be taken of legislative journals before they are published,[45] or before they are filed in the office of the secretary of state.[46] Courts generally cannot judicially notice the contents of legislative bills as introduced,[47] but under a statute providing for the certification and filing of copies of all printed bills, the court will notice the contents of a bill properly certified and filed in the office of the secretary of state.[48]

Of municipality. The courts have taken judicial notice of aldermen,[49] of the name and official signature of the clerk of a city council or board of aldermen,[50] and of the fact of common knowledge that the duties of city councils are ordinarily performed to a great extent through the agency of committees of their membership,[51] and that among these is usually a committee having special charge and oversight of the public ways within the municipality.[52] They do not take judicial notice that an ordinance or other action of the legislative body of a city is unreasonably discriminatory.[53] It seems that any court which takes judicial notice of municipal ordinances, see supra § 27, will in like manner notice such journals and records of the lawmaking body of the municipality as affect the validity or construction of the ordinances.[54] The court may take judicial notice of the fact that municipal boards usually have available to them the services of experienced counsel, and that contracts are let only on the advice and approval of counsel.[55]

"So while courts have no judicial power to control the judgment of discretion of legislative officials in the preparation or publication of legislative journals, even after the Legislature has finally adjourned, their duty of judicially noticing legislative journals as importing absolute verity, when collaterally involved in a litigated case affecting private legal rights, necessarily entitles a litigant, who may be adversely affected by what purports to be a legislative record, to have expunged from such record, and consequently put beyond the range of the court's judicial notice of his prejudice, any matters that may have been incorporated in a putative legislative record without authority to the Legislature, or by direction of the Legislature acting in excess of its legislative powers."—State ex rel. Printed pamphlets

In determining the validity of a statute where it is attacked on the ground that the constitutional requirements were not observed in its passage, it is the duty of the court to take notice that the legislature caused the records of their proceedings to be published daily in pamphlet form; and it is the duty of the court to take judicial notice of these daily journals to satisfy itself about what actually transpired in the legislature in the passage of the act.—State ex rel. § 44. Judicial Department in General

Judicial notice of particular facts relating to the judicial department are discussed in detail in the sections immediately following.

Examine Pocket Parts for later cases.

§ 45. Organization, Jurisdiction, and Powers of Courts

Judicial notice will be taken of the organization, jurisdiction, and powers of the courts of the state created by the constitution or by statute.

Judges of state courts take judicial notice of the existence, organization, jurisdiction, and powers of their own court[57] and of other tribunals created by the constitution or established by statute.[58] Federal courts are regarded as domestic tribunals by the state courts, and judicial notice is taken of their jurisdiction,[59] including jurisdiction over places ceded by the state[60] but not of their jurisdiction over land purchased or condemned by the United States.[61]

In other states. State courts may notice in a general way the existence of and jurisdiction of courts in other states,[62] or in Canada,[63] and salient facts regarding them, as that the supreme courts are courts of record,[64] or that a circuit court, district court, or court of common pleas in a sister state is a court of general jurisdiction;[65] but judicial notice of such matters has also been declined.[66]

Federal courts notice the existence, organization and jurisdiction of their own and other federal courts of every grade,[67] including those of bankruptcy,[68] and the jurisdiction of their own subordinate officers, such as commissioners[69] and magistrates appointed by the court.[70] Also they take judicial notice of the jurisdiction of the courts of the state wherein they are sitting.[71]

Seals. Judicial notice will be taken of the official seals of state and federal courts,[72] but not of the seals of foreign municipal courts.[73] The seal of a court of admiralty[74] or vice admiralty[75] will be judicially noticed, as those courts are recognized by the law of nations.

§ 46. Judicial Districts

Judicial notice will be taken of the judicial districts or circuits within the state.

The court will take judicial notice of the various judicial districts,[76] the courts included,[77] their relative locations within the state,[78] their boundaries,[79] and their territorial extent.[80] A state court judicially knows the boundaries of the state[81] and those of federal judicial districts,[82] and the location of, counties, municipalities, or other known places therein.[83] Judicial notice will also be taken of counties coming within a class designated by a constitutional provision requiring a certain number of magisterial districts.[84]

A federal court takes judicial notice of the boundaries of federal judicial districts as related to political divisions of the state, and judicially knows what counties in a state are within a particular federal district.[85] The court will also take notice of what district a particular city is in.[86]

§ 47. Terms and Sessions of Courts and Quasi Judicial Bodies

Courts know their own terms and sessions and the terms of other courts of the state as established by law.

All courts judicially know the terms and sessions of their own courts;[87] the legal power to adjourn;[88] and the terms of other courts of the state, that is, the beginning and duration or possible length as established by law,[89] rather than by order,[90] but not the actual close, end, or adjournment,[91] unless it is by operation of law.[92] They also take judicial notice of the legally established sittings of important administrative boards exercising semijudicial functions, such as county commissioners.[93] Knowledge of the beginning and duration of terms implies recognition of the coincidence in the month and week of a designated day of the term,[94] and, conversely, in what term of the court a particular date falls,[95] and therefore whether an act done on a particular day was done in term time or after the term had

County courts

(1) Where the beginning of terms of county courts is fixed by statute, judicial notice will be taken thereof by the appellate court.—Wyman v. American Mortg. Corporation, Tex. Civ.App., 45 S.W.2d 629.

(2) The rule is otherwise, however, where the regular terms of county courts are held at such times as may be fixed on and entered of record by the county court.—Doak v. Smith, 116 S.E. 691, 93 W.Va. 133.

(3) Likewise the appellate court cannot take judicial notice of the number or length of terms of a county court where the commissioner's courts of the various counties may fix the terms of the county courts.—Hall v. Butereg Co., Tex. Civ.App., 114 S.W.2d 403.

(4) As regards sufficiency of posting of notices of probate, appellate court could not take judicial knowledge that county court did not prescribe dates of terms of that court.—Idar v. Uehlinger, Tex.Civ.App., 49 S W.2d 998, error refused.

Finality of judgment

expired.[96] Matters of common knowledge relating to terms of court may also be judicially noticed, such as that terms of particular courts often last until the day before the succeeding term,[97] and that a long term was necessary in a particular court because of accumulated business.[98]

§ 48. Judges, Justices, and Court Officials

Judicial notice is taken of the judges and justices within the state, and of numerous other court officials.

Courts judicially know who are the judges,[99] present or past,[1] of their own or other courts within the state or jurisdiction, including justices of the peace;[2] the date of their appointment or election[3] and that on which they qualify[4] or take office;[5] under what law they are commissioned,[6] and whether a proper commission has issued;[7] their terms of office;[8] their salaries;[9] their official signatures;[10] the fact that a certain judge continued to hold office until the expiration of his term;[11] and the date when a particular judge resigned[12] or died,[13] or

Locality of office
Courts will take judicial notice of the official character of the justices of the peace in their own States, but the locality of a justice's office is not such a matter of public notoriety as to be a subject of judicial recognition.—Dacus v. Knoxville Outfitting Co., 9 Tenn.App. 683.

when for any other reason he ceased to be a judge.[14] The number of judges in a particular district may also be judicially noticed.[15] Judicial notice, however, is not taken of the absence of a judge from the jurisdiction;[16] of his handwriting other than his signature;[17] of an unofficial signature;[18] that a particular judge was presiding on a given date when there is another judge of the court;[19] or that the judge and a person appearing in another capacity with an identical name are one and the same person.[20] A court cannot know who are the judges of courts of record in another state.[21] Judicial notice is taken of a special judge appointed to hold a term of court,[22] but not of a special judge or judge pro tempore selected to try a specific cause.[23]

Retired federal judges. It is a matter of common knowledge that retired federal judges have in fact discharged a large measure of the duties appertaining to regular active service.[24]

Court officials. Courts judicially notice their own officials[25] and their official signatures,[26] and usually a state court takes the same judicial notice of the officials of other courts of the state.[27] Where such is a matter of common knowledge, judicial notice may be taken of the practice of paying the compensation to court officers on allowances made by the court.[28]

Clerks. All courts judicially know their own clerks[29] and deputy clerks[30] and their names.[31] Appellate courts take judicial notice of the clerks of courts over which they exercise appellate jurisdiction.[32] The lower state courts have in several instances taken judicial notice of the clerk[33] and deputy clerk[34] of another court in the same or another[35] county in the state, although it has been indicated that a court will not judicially know an officer of another court.[36] Judicial notice of clerks and their deputies includes knowledge of their duties[37] and term of office,[38] identification of their signatures,[39] whether the official designation is given as "clerk"[40] or "deputy,"[41] or is represented merely by initials,[42] or is otherwise not given in full.[43]

State courts do not as a rule take judicial cognizance of clerks of courts in other states,[44] their signatures,[45] or official seals;[46] but in one state clerks of courts of record in other states are judicially noticed, to the extent at least of judicially recognizing their certificates of acknowledgment of deeds of land situated in the state.[47]

The clerk of a federal court sitting within the state may be judicially noticed,[48] but not the clerk of a federal court in another state.[49] However, a territorial court judicially recognizes the clerk of a federal court sitting in another state.[50]

Sheriffs, constables, and marshals. State courts judicially know who are the officers appointed by law for the service of process, such as the sheriffs of the several counties,[51] tax collectors acting as sheriffs under statutory authority,[52] city marshals authorized to serve process,[53] and constables acting as court officers;[54] their duties,[55] their terms of office,[56] their identity,[57] and their names and signatures,[58] even where the official title is indicated by initials,[59] or after a successor has been elected and is performing the duties of the office.[60] It has been held that officers such as deputy sheriffs, not commissioned in the name of the state, are not judicially recognized;[61] but other cases are to the contrary.[62] Federal courts will take judicial notice of United States marshals.[63] State courts do not judicially notice a deputy United States marshal,[64] or the official character of a sheriff of a county in another state.[65] of their terms of office,[68] and their duties and authority[69] are judicially known. In some jurisdictions, the fact that a city attorney is head of the city's legal department is a matter of common knowledge.[70]

An attorney at law is judicially recognized by the court in which he is admitted to practice.[71] The date of his admission to practice,[72] and his signature in his professional capacity when attached to pleadings, etc.,[73] are likewise known; but not his signature in a personal capacity,[74] as, for example, when he is acting as his own attorney.[75] Although the court may judicially notice the residence of the members of its own bar,[76] a court cannot judicially know particular facts concerning an attorney of its bar, as that he is in actual practice[77] or has removed from the state,[78] or that he is plaintiff in an action in the court by a party bearing his name;[79] and a superior court will not take judicial notice of attorneys admitted to practice in lower courts but not members of its own bar.[80]

Receivers. The court by which a receiver was appointed will take notice of such appointment.[81] The nature and extent of the powers of a receiver appointed by a court of bankruptcy, being matters of public law, are judicially known.[82]

§ 49. Practice and Procedure

Courts take judicial notice of their own rules, but, in the absence of a statute to the contrary, they do not take notice of the rules of other tribunals. Matters of common knowledge relating to practice in court will be judicially noticed.

Courts take judicial cognizance of the rules of practice prevailing in their own tribunal,[83] and assume a general similarity in the procedure of other courts.[84] In the absence of a valid statute to the contrary,[85] courts do not take judicial notice of

Drawing of papers

It is common knowledge that, throughout the state, county attorneys in small counties personally attend to work of drawing informations, instructions, and other papers in criminal cases.—Hyde v. Mineral County, 236 P. 248, 73 Mont. 363.

Practice

Court took judicial notice that it had been practice of some state's attorneys to appear in other counties and defend respondents charged with committing crimes therein and to appear in proceedings in which state was opposing party or had adverse interests.—In re Wakefield, 177 A. 319, 107 Vt. 180.

However, it has been held that the court should not take judicial notice that a named person was an attorney.—White v. Haralson, 124 So. 417, 220 Ala. 189.

Conversely, judicial notice is taken that the name of a certain person does not appear on the roll kept by the clerk of the supreme court as a person licensed to practice as an attorney.—Bennie v. Triangle Ranch Co., 216 P. 718, 73 Colo. 586.

Absence of rule

Under a statute requiring that judicial notice be taken of the rules of the lower court, the reviewing court will take notice that there is no rule as to a particular matter.—Whalen v. Twin City Barge & Grav-

the rules of practice in other courts of equal or inferior authority,[86] or of the practice or procedure of courts in another state.[87] A federal court exercising original jurisdiction or jurisdiction by removal from a state court takes judicial notice of the laws of the state, see supra § 15, but not of the rules of a state court affecting procedure.[88]

Matters of common knowledge relating to practices in court, or proceedings in courts, or matters generally known to the legal profession, although not established by statute or court rule, have been judicially noticed,[89] as has been procedure estab-

Certified rules

Court of appeals takes judicial notice, under statute, of circuit court rules certified to it.—Combs v. Allen, 271 S.W. 598, 208 Ky. 519.

Operation of statute

Since a statute providing that an appellate court on review shall take judicial notice of all rules of practice adopted by the inferior court is remedial, judicial notice will be taken of such rules even though a final judgment was entered in the case before the act went into effect. —Capital State Sav. Decrees

Court takes judicial knowledge of its own decrees.—Beggs v. Brooker, Tex.Civ.App., 79 S.W.2d 642, affirmed Beggs v. Fite, 106 S.W.2d 1039, 130 Tex. 46.

Fact of keeping

Circuit court of appeals takes judicial notice that courts of second circuit for a long time have kept a decree book as part of minutes of court.—The Washington, C.C.A.N.Y., 16 F.2d 206.

Papers filed

Court will take judicial cognizance of all papers filed therein.—Johnston v. Geary, 33 P.2d 757, 84 Utah 47.

Pleadings will be judicially noticed.—Parker v. Sims, 51 S.W.2d 517, court.[97] Accordingly a court, by the use of judicial notice of its records, may ascertain such facts as that a certain case[98] or appeal[99] is or is not pending, that a claim is or is not barred by the statute of limitations,[1] and other facts which may be obtained from its records.[2]

Unless otherwise entitled to judicial notice, matters outside the record ordinarily will not be noticed.[3] Acts done in the clerk's office dehors the record will not be judicially noticed,[4] although the rule is otherwise when a fact of this nature, such as payment of money into court, is entered as of record.[5]

The court may examine records[6] or docket entries,[7] either of its own motion[8] or at the suggestion of counsel,[9] to ascertain the relevant facts set forth in them; but its judicial knowledge does not have greater force and effect than would be accorded the evidence of which it supplies the place.[10]

b. In Same Case or in Engrafted, Ancillary, or Supplementary Proceedings

A court may take judicial notice of its own records in the same case or in engrafted, ancillary, or supplementary proceedings.

In a case on trial in any court its records are actually or constructively before the judge. He will therefore take judicial notice of them and the facts which they establish,[11] as in dealing with pleas in same case in the same court may be judicially noticed[18] and the decision on the former appeal will be judicially noticed.[19] Where, however, on account of differences in the theory advanced and facts presented the decision on the former appeal is not the law of the case in subsequent proceedings, see Appeal and Error § 1964 d, it will not be judicially noticed as such.[20] Likewise, in some instances, the court has refused to take judicial notice of its record, and the facts disclosed by such record, in a prior appeal.[21]

In considering the sufficiency of the petition, the court can take judicial notice only of those matters of record in existence at the time the petition was filed.[22] The court will not take judicial notice of the truth of statements made on a preliminary motion raising objections to the trial of the action before the judge in the court below.[23] An appellate court will not, under guise of taking judicial notice of the record, take judicial cognizance of facts occurring subsequently to the judgment or order appealed from where such facts would have been considered by the lower court if they had preëxisted the judgment and where they are not such facts as would be pertinent on a motion to dismiss the appeal;[24] nor can an appellate court know that the judgment appealed from was rendered upon an agreement to arbitrate, or upon an award.[25]

remembers the contents thereof,[40] or even though the parties are the same.[41] At least, the court cannot be required or expected to take such notice.[42] This general rule, however, is not an inflexible one and has several exceptions.[43] The fact that such exceptions exist indicate that the rule is not based on lack of power but is a rule of expediency,[44] to be applied or refused application as the equities and justice of the cases require.[45] It has also been indicated that a broad restriction of the power to take judicial notice of its own records is not well suited to the conduct of the business of an appellate court.[46] Consequently, in the exercise of their discretion,[47] at least where such records are properly called to their attention,[48] for one purpose or another courts have frequently taken notice of their

"The reason for the rule above referred to is that the decision of a cause must depend upon the evidence introduced. If the courts should recognize judicially facts adjudicated in another case, it makes those facts, though unsupported by evidence in the case in hand, conclusive against the opposing party; while if they had been properly introduced they might have been met and overcome by him."—Paridy v. Caterpillar Tractor Co., C.C.A.Ill., 48 F.2d 166, 169.

Facts

The court will not take judicial notice of facts on which its former decisions were based to the extent of recognizing them as facts in the case under consideration.

Proof of issue

Where a showing of the existence of some record or entry in another case in the court is essential to enable a party to a cause to bear his burden of proof on some matter at issue, the court will not take judicial notice thereof, and the record itself must be introduced in evidence.—Richards Brick Co. v. Residence of petitioner

Where a statute confers jurisdiction of nonresident guardians and nonresident wards where the ward has real or personal property situated in the county, in a proceeding to remove the disability of minority the court cannot take judicial notice that petitioner is a resident because guardianship proceedings are pending in the court at the time.—Dulion v. d. Records of Other Courts

Courts ordinarily do not take judicial notice of the records of other courts.

In the absence of statutory requirement,[57] except for notice of the fact of their existence,[58] state courts do not take judicial notice of the records of other courts in the state[59] or of federal courts.[60] It has been held, however, that an appellate court in its discretion may take judicial notice of the files of the lower court,[61] and it has also been held that a state court should take judicial notice of the formal judgments of the federal courts when such judgments are duly made public.[62] Federal courts do not take judicial notice of the records of other federal[63] or state[64] courts, except in special circumstances, as where the contents of the record are of general notoriety.[65] In some instances federal courts have taken judicial notice of related matters appearing in published reports of a state court;[66] and a state court, in construing a statute, took judicial notice of a long and uninterrupted practical construction given to it by a present surrogate and his predecessors in another county.[67] Since the federal courts take judicial notice of the judicial opinions of any state of the Union, see supra § 15, it is permissible for a federal court to examine the record resulting in an opinion in a state court in order to ascertain the grounds on which the opinion is based.[68] The federal court, however, need not accept, as proved, facts so regarded by the state court.[69]

On plea of res judicata, the opinion of the ap-

pellate court in a prior case between the same parties may be judicially noticed by the trial court.[70] Likewise, judicial notice has been taken in habeas corpus proceedings that another federal court has exercised jurisdiction with respect to petitioner and concerning the causes of which he complains.[71]

Bankruptcy proceedings in the federal courts are not judicially noticed in the state courts or in any court other than the initial court of bankruptcy.[72]

§ 51. Elections and Appointments

Matters of general law or common knowledge relating to elections and appointments by the president or governor will be judicially noticed.

State courts judicially know general election laws.[73] Accordingly courts judicially know the years of general registration,[74] the dates of holding primary elections,[75] general elections,[76] or a special election provided for by a general law;[77] but a court has declined to take judicial notice of the time when elections are held under special acts of the legislature.[78] Courts also take judicial notice of what officers are to be elected, or were elected, at the regular elections,[79] and the result of the election as shown by official returns.[80] What party

Municipal election
Courts will take judicial notice of municipal election and result there-

"tickets" were before the voters at a general election is likewise a matter which may be judicially noticed,[81] as may be the parties entitled to a place on the ballot.[82] Judicial notice is sometimes taken of a contest of an election,[83] and in an election contest the court will take judicial notice that the contestee had been declared elected.[84] The federal courts take judicial notice of the dates of elections;[85] but the dates of elections in one state are not judicially known by the courts of other states.[86]

A state court judicially notices the governor's appointments to offices,[87] but judicial notice will not be taken of such appointments in other states.[88] Judicial notice is also taken of appointments by the president of the United States,[89] and that nominations by the president sent to the senate are usually referred to the appropriate committee for investigation and report.[90]

Matters of common knowledge concerning elections[91] and appointments[92] may be judicially noticed, but facts which are not established by law nor are matters of common knowledge will not be judicially noticed.[93]

Elections on propositions. The fact that an election on a proposition was had will be judicially noticed,[94] and, conversely, the fact that a proposition was not submitted to the electors may likewise be noticed.[95] The courts take judicial notice of facts necessary to a decision of the question whether or not a statute or constitutional amendment has been ratified by popular vote,[96] and hence they know, if such is the fact, that a constitutional amendment has been adopted.[97] Courts will recognize the provisions of a statute authorizing its adoption by a city or other political subdivision;[98] but except in some instances in some jurisdictions[99] the courts do not take judicial notice of the local adoption of a general law or of the results of an election on a question or proposition submitted to the voters of a county, township, state, village or other district or political subdivision,[1] unless required by statute to do so,[2] or unless the result of such election is entitled to judicial notice as a matter of common knowledge.[3]

Initiative measure. It is a matter of common knowledge that an initiative measure is originated by some organization or a small group of people and that they circulate a petition requiring the signatures of only a small per cent of the voters; that the measure is then placed on the ballot and a large number of the population, not knowing what the context of the act is, rely solely on its title as a guide to intelligent voting thereon.[4]

Voting machines. The court may take judicial notice of the mechanical means or operation whereby a voter records his choice of candidates on a voting machine.[5]

§ 52. Mail Service

Judicial notice will be taken of the usual course of business of the mails.

Judicial notice will be taken of the usual course of business of the mails.[6] Judicial notice may be taken that daily mails pass between certain points.[7] In a number of cases the courts have taken judicial notice of the approximate time required for the transportation of mail between two places and its delivery in due course to the addressee,[8] as well as of the time for delivery in due course of a letter where the sender and addressee are in the same city;[9] but in a few cases the courts have declined to take judicial notice of the character of mail communication,[10] or of the time required for the transportation of mail[11] between two places; and in some jurisdictions the courts, while doubting their power to take judicial notice of the existence of regular mail service between two places generally, do so in a particular case where the existence of such service is a matter of common knowledge.[12] Courts do not take judicial notice of the time of the arrival or departure of mails or trains, or of the number of mails between different places.[13] It is common knowledge that short delays often occur in the matter of mail delivery.[14]

Judicial notice will be taken of the post offices within the jurisdiction.[15] Also the courts will take judicial notice that a free delivery system is not in force in all cities and villages in the state,[16] and that in such case the usual post-office address of many persons is merely the name of the city, the addition of a street address being unnecessary and unusual.[17]

Facts of common knowledge or established by statute relating to registered mails may be judicially noticed,[18] such as that registration of mail guarantees a stricter responsibility on the part of the supervising government,[19] and that it is the slowest method of transmitting mail;[20] and the courts take judicial notice of the well-known distinction between a registered letter and one posted for special delivery.[21]

Matters which are not of common knowledge or established by statute relating to the mails and use thereof cannot be judicially noticed.[22]

§ 53. Public Surveys

Public or governmental surveys may be judicially noticed.

The courts take judicial notice of public or government surveys and the general system thereof;[23]

Record and receipt

(1) Court takes judicial cognizance of fact that post office makes record of registered mail and gives receipt therefor which is usually kept by tax collector when sending registered notice of tax delinquency.—Calcasieu Mercantile Co. v. Frank, La.App., 161 So. 201.

(2) It is common knowledge that registered mail must be receipted for when offered for delivery.—Buffalo Cadillac Corporation v. Eisele, 266 N.Y S. 165, 148 Misc. 592.

(3) The supreme court takes judicial notice that return receipt signed by person to whom registered mail is addressed does not contain the date of mailing but does contain the date of arrival at the post office of destination.—Dairy Distributers v. Department of Agriculture and Markets, 280 N W. 400, 228 Wis. 418.

Registry office

Judicial notice may be taken that a particular post office was registry office.—Matlock v. Citizens' Nat. Bank of Salmon, 250 P. 648, 43 Idaho 214, 50 A L.R. 1418.

Call omitted

Where description in decree omitted call between the last call of the description employed in the decree and the beginning point, such call would be supplied by the supreme court by taking judicial notice as to government surveys.—Hinds v. Federal Land Bank of New Orleans, 186 So. 153, 237 Ala. 218.

Field notes

Court could judicially notice contents of surveyor's field notes produced from files of land office.—Inyo Marble Co. v. Loundagin, 7 P.2d 1067, 120 Cal.App. 298.

Inaccuracies

It is a matter of general observation to bench and bar that a large percentage of the original government surveys of agricultural lands were in some degree inaccurate.—Capps v. Clark, 195 N.W. 372, 196 Iowa 758.

Land lots

Judicial notice has been taken of the shape of land lots in particular counties, and of the directions in which their lines run.—Benton v. Munday, 187 S E. 874, 183 Ga 228—Rowland v. Matthews, 113 S.E. 442, 153 Ga. 849—Harper v Hesterlee, 109 S.E. 902, 152 Ga. 251—Darley v. Starr, 102 S.E. 819, 150 Ga. 88.

Monuments

(1) Courts take judicial notice that at all government section corners permanent monuments exist.—Trustee of Schools v. Dassow, 151 N. E. 896, 321 Ill. 346—City of Chicago v. Chicago, B & Q R. Co., 150 N E. 250, 319 Ill. 351.

(2) Court judicially knows that government survey system does not call for any physical monuments at centers of sections.—Matthews v. Parker, 299 P. 354, 163 Wash. 10.

Public lands

Under a statute providing that courts will take judicial notice of the area,[24] location,[25] as being within a state,[26] county,[27] township,[28] city,[29] or judicial district,[30] of the lands surveyed; their numbering;[31] the existence and location of the base and meridian lines;[32] the relative position of counties or townships to base and meridian lines or points of the compass;[33] and nomenclature[34] and relative size[35] of the territorial divisions thus established; how the divisions are constituted in particular instances,[36] including the position of the range lines;[37] the relative positions of sections in the same township;[38] and the location of fractional townships,[39] or, on the other hand, that a particular legal subdivision of a section of land is not fractional,[40] or that the township lines coincide with the sectional.[41] Judicial notice cannot be taken of the topography of the land surveyed,[42] or of its minor subdivisions,[43] nor probably of the position, on the ground, of a particular lot.[44] It is common knowledge that in past years the evidences of the government surveys were more likely to be found, and that the bearings of present day surveys, where courses and distances are relied on, are liable to be in error, or, rather, fail to follow the original lines, unless some original corners or lines aid in making a check and correction of trial lines.[45]

§ 54. Revenue and Taxation

Courts will take judicial notice of facts relating to revenue and taxation which are established by law or which are matters of common knowledge.

Judicial notice will be taken of facts relating to revenue and taxation which are established by law or which are matters of common knowledge,[46] but court must take judicial notice of the constitutional methods provided for raising revenue, it cannot take notice of the amount so raised and received.[56] It judicially knows the purposes for which funds raised by taxation may be used;[57] and that a county has other sources of revenue than its general tax levy.[58]

§ 55. Foreign Governments in General

Judicial notice will be taken of foreign governments which have been recognized as sovereign states by the United States, and facts of common knowledge relating to foreign governments may likewise be judicially noticed.

The recognition of a foreign government is a political act which is binding on the courts and is, therefore, judicially noticed by them;[59] and courts take judicial notice whether or not a foreign government has been recognized as a sovereign state by our government.[60] The existence of a foreign government which has been formally recognized by our government,[61] and the identity of its colonies or other political dependencies,[62] and of its ports of entry,[63] are judicially known. The fact that the government of a foreign country which is recognized by the United States has been overthrown,[64] that there is another government in such country which has not been recognized by our government,[65] and that such government is the only one existing in such country,[66] may be judicially noticed. Courts, however, have no judicial knowledge of subordinate departments existing under foreign governments.[67] Neither can judicial notice be tak-

Tax deeds cannot be judicially noticed in respect of their forms or dates, or whether or not they are void upon their face, where it is notorious that their form varies from time to time.—Fitschen v. Olson, 119 N.W. 3, 155 Mich. 320.

Nonexistence

(1) The fact that a foreign government, which at best constituted only a de facto entity, has ceased to exist may be judicially noticed where such is a matter of common knowledge.—Nankivel v. Omsk All-Russian Government, 142 N.E. 569, 237 N.Y. 150, reversing 197 N.Y.S. 467, 203 App.Div. 740.

Town officials

en in a suit in rem against a steamship owned by a private corporation that the steamship is in the public service and under the control of a foreign government as an admiralty transport.[68] Likewise, the solvency of a foreign state cannot be judicially noticed.[69]

Judicial notice may be taken of facts of common knowledge relating to foreign countries, such as the identity of their principal officials,[70] general conditions existing in such countries,[71] and the practice of many foreign governments to own and operate railroads.[72] The official acts of minor officials of foreign countries cannot be judicially noticed.[73]

§ 56. Government Flags and Seals

Judicial notice will be taken of the flags and great seals of governments which have been recognized as sovereign nations by our government.

In conformity to the law of nations all courts in a government, where that government has recognized the existence of a foreign nation, but not in the absence of such recognition,[74] will take cognizance of the flag and great seal[75] of that nation or its provinces.[76] For a like reason,[77] reinforced by the construction of a federal statute,[78] all courts in the United States take judicial notice of the seals of the several states and territories,[79] but these seals are not judicially known in the courts of a foreign nation.[80] The seal of the United States is judicially noticed by state courts.[81] Seals of municipalities, domestic[82] or foreign,[83] except the seal of the city of London,[84] or the seals of executive departments in other states or countries,[85] will not be judicially noticed in the absence of statutory requirement.[86]

§ 57. Treaties and Execution Thereof

Judicial notice will be taken of treaties entered into between the United States and foreign countries or Indian tribes, and, at least in the courts of the states concerned, of treaties between states of the Union.

All courts in the United States take judicial notice of treaties made between the United States and foreign governments,[87] or Indian tribes,[88] and judicial notice may be taken, at least in the courts of the states concerned, of treaties between the various states in the Union.[89] Judicial notice of treaties includes notice of their dates[90] and ratification.[91] Likewise, courts must take judicial knowledge of the historical data leading up to treaties, as well as the construction of them by both the executive and judicial branches of the government;[92] and notice may be taken of the contents of public documents executed pursuant to their provisions,[93] and the public acts done and proclamations issued in carrying them into effect.[94] On the other hand, judicial notice is not taken of superseded treaties,[95] or of foreign laws and usages referred to in treaties,[96] or of acts done under a treaty with an Indian tribe which affect only a small portion of the tribe.[97]

Judicial notice of these matters is sometimes placed on the ground that treaties are in the same category as domestic constitutions and statutes of which judicial notice must be taken,[98] and sometimes on the ground that they are historical and notorious facts.[99]

§ 58. History and Historical Facts

Judicial notice may be taken of historical facts.

Courts may take judicial notice of matters of public history,[1] including the political history of foreign countries.[2] Judicial notice of history includes notice of matters of current history.[3] Courts, however, cannot assume knowledge of the secondary and more minute circumstances connected with historical events, although of general interest,[4] and, of course, before judicial notice may be taken of an alleged historical fact, it must be certain and undisputable.[5]

§ 59. General History of State or Territory

A court in a state may take judicial notice of the history of events in the state.

The courts of a state and federal courts sitting therein will judicially know the general history of the state.[6] This principle has been applied to the

The district court properly took judicial notice that the records of the parish had been destroyed by fire, and that certain books of conveyances were included in the records destroyed.—Grotevant v. Dorresteim, 94 So. 372, 152 La. 734.

Highways, etc.

In counties where the court is conversant with its general affairs, judicial notice may be taken of the existence of highways, bridges, public buildings, and abandoned turnpikes; but such notice must be predicated on a general knowledge of local history in relation to the highway.—Commonwealth v. Ball, 121 A. 191, 192, 277 Pa. 301, 29 A.L.R. 626, citing Corpus Juris.

Former location of buildings

The supreme court cannot take judicial notice of the former existence or respective locations of a certain schoolhouse and church or old meetinghouse, or of a certain tavern.—Burch v. City of Amity, 180 P. 312, 92 Or. 152.

Since a court will take judicial cognizance of the political history of the country and state,[15] it will thereby inform itself generally of the existence of organized political parties,[16] governed by rules and regulations[17] of their own adoption,[18] and more particularly it will inform itself of the date of birth,[19] the party name,[20] and the relative strength[21] of prominent political organizations; and that the same person is sometimes the nominee, at an election, of more than one political party.[22] The court, however, will not attempt to take judicial notice of the character of the Communist party, and that it advocates the overthrow of the government by force and violence,[23] although it has also been held that the program of the Red International Labor Union and the Communists is a matter of general knowledge.[24]

§ 62. Wars and Insurrections

Judicial notice may be taken of historical facts of general knowledge relating to wars and insurrections.

Courts judicially know whether the United States is or is not at war,[25] and judicial notice will be taken of an existing war between our own country and a foreign power,[26] at least after the fact has been formally recognized by other departments of the government.[27] The existence of a war between foreign nations has been judicially noticed,[28] as has been the existence of a state of war between a foreign country and one of her colonies seeking independence,[29] and the state of a civil war in a foreign country.[30] The court will take judicial notice that after the signing and ratification of the Treaty of Paris the Philippine Islands were in a state of insurrection against the government of the United States.[31] It has been judicially noticed that it would be highly dangerous to the peace of the United States that a vessel flying the American flag enter the waters of warring nations.[32]

Actions

In determining whether an action against the Emergency Fleet Corporation is one against the United States, judicial notice will be taken of historical facts of general interest.—Ingersoll-Rand Co. v. U. S. Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation, 187 N.Y.S. 695, 195 App. Div. 838.

States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation,[53] the issuance of bonds by the government,[54] the requisitioning by the shipping board of a great part of the shipping of the country,[55] and the government's urgent need for airplanes.[56]

§ 63. Other Facts of History

Judicial notice has been taken of various historical facts.

In addition to the facts discussed in detail in the preceding sections, numerous historical facts have been judicially noticed.[57] For example, courts judicially know the historical facts concerning the political action of their own country in foreign affairs.[58] Judicial notice will also be taken that Indians, at a certain time, subsisted by hunting and fishing,[59] of the history of the Six Nations of Indians,[60] of the territories out of which a state of the Union was constituted,[61] and, at least in some cases, of the history of foreign possessions subsequently acquired by the United States.[62] The courts know, as historical facts, that California was once a part of Mexico,[63] that Mexico was a Spanish colony for about three hundred years before it became an independent republic,[64] and that it was the policy of the Spanish and Mexican governments, in making grants, to give front, if possible, on some stream.[65] The fact that Florida was acquired by purchase from Spain in 1819 will likewise be judicially noticed.[66] It will be noticed that slavery existed in certain of the American states prior to the Civil War.[67] The courts take judicial notice, as a matter of public history, of the existence of labor unions,[68] the size and extent of their membership generally,[69] of the facts that frequent conflicts have occurred between employers and employees in vari-

It is matter of judicial knowledge that when charter was granted to Independent Order of Odd Fellows in Georgia in 1843, persons of color had no civil rights, and were not subject to be chartered, and could not have obtained a charter.—Graves v. District Grand Lodge No. 18, 129 S.E. 783, 161 Ga. 110.

ous states,[70] and that there is a conflict between the unions affiliated with the American Federation of Labor and those affiliated with the Committee for Industrial Organization.[71] Some courts also take notice, as a part of the history of the country, that labor unions have adopted and promulgated rules and regulations for the protection and guidance of labor, which are carefully observed by the members;[72] but other courts decline to assume judicial knowledge of the compact or agreement, or its nature, or of the principles and tenets by which laborers belonging to a union are bound.[73]

Circulating medium. Courts will notice as a historical fact of great notoriety and importance the nature of the circulating medium at a particular time,[74] and the popular language in reference to it.[75] They will take judicial notice of a change from a gold basis to a paper standard,[76] of the different classes of notes and bills in circulation as money at any particular time,[77] and of the elimination of gold and silver and United States paper currency from circulation in the Confederate States and the general facts connected with the issuing, use, and depreciation of the Confederate currency.[78] It is not judicially known that there were no Mexican bank notes before a certain date, particularly where such fact is disputed.[79]

Economic conditions. The court will take judicial notice of general economic conditions,[80] in-

Evils arising from controversies

It is common knowledge that an aroused public opinion and the vigorous enforcement of the criminal law, resulting in the prosecution and punishment of scores of labor malefactors, has tended to curb breaches of the peace, assault and battery, and like evils arising from labor controversies.—American Federation of Labor v. Bain, Or., 106 P. 2d 544, 130 A.L.R. 1278.

Picketing

It is matter of common knowledge that labor unions do not limit use of picketing to occasions when union employees are on strike because of labor disputes between them and their employers.—C. S. Smith Metropolitan Market Co. v. Lyons, Cal., 106 P.2d 414, prior opinion, App., 89 P.2d 425.

Existing obligations

It is common knowledge that states, municipalities, and railroads and public utilities, while receiving their income under new devalued dollar standard, have generally outstanding bonds with gold clause, and that similar situation exists with respect to numerous industrial corporations which have issued gold bonds and must receive payment for products in existing currency, as respects validity of Joint Resolution in effect abrogating gold clauses in existing obligations.—Norman v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 55 S.Ct. 407, 294 U S 240, 79 L Ed. 885, 95 A.L.R. 1352, affirming 191 N.E. 726, 265 N.Y. 37, 92 A.L.R. 1523, which affirmed 270 N.Y.S. 928, 241 App.Div. 803, and certiorari granted 55 S.Ct. 103, 293 U.S. 546, 79 L.Ed. 650—U. Payments due in gold

Judicial notice may be taken that amount of bonds and notes payable in United States gold coin exceeds, by many billions of dollars, amount of mined gold in world, although precise amount of such gold obligations cannot be proved.—In re Missouri Pac. R. Co., D.C.Mo., 7 F.Supp. 1, certiorari granted U. S. v. Bankers' Trust Co., 55 S.Ct. 145 (two cases), 293 U.S. 548, 79 L.Ed. 652, affirmed 55 S.Ct. 407, 294 U.S. 240, 79 L.Ed. 885, 95 A.L.R. 1352.

"That there is a nation-wide depression existing and prevailing, which is neither a psychological idealism nor an incongruous fancy, but a regrettable reality, manifesting itself in every vocation and business by its presence in every community, is common knowledge, not only to the layman, but to the courts."—Leeper Oil Co. v. Rowland, 39 S W.2d 486, 489, 239 Ky. 295.

U.S.—Plimpton v. Mattakeunk Cabin Colony, D.C.Conn., 9 F.Supp. 288.

Foreclosure sales

Court may take judicial notice that outside competing bids are rare in sales on foreclosure of large mortgages because of depression, and that such sales are often little more than steps in reorganization and refinancing plan.—Clinton Trust Co. v 142-144 Joralemon St. Corporation, 263 N.Y.S. 359, 237 App.Div. 789, reargument denied 263 N.Y S. 366, 238 App.Div. 858.

Height of depression

Wis.—In re Pratt's Estate, 266 N.W. 230, 221 Wis. 114.

Labor conditions

While trial court may take judicial notice of general labor conditions existing in 1919, it cannot take judicial notice that such conditions interfered with delivery of silos under a contract by a certain concern.—Johnston v. O'Connell, 183 N.W. 283, 44 S.D. 232.

Lack of cash

It is matter of general knowledge, particularly during last several years, that there are many persons who have ample assets and are not insolvent but lack cash in hand.—Irving Trust Co. v. Manufacturers' Trust Co., D.C.N.Y., 6 F.Supp. 185.

Yield from investments

The supreme court will judicially notice that the trend and course of yield from invested property in its various forms, kind, and character during the past ten years has been downward, and that in general the yield has been reduced from one half to one third.—State v. Hampton Water Works Co., N.H., 18 A.2d 765, rehearing denied 19 A.2d 435.

§ 64. Identity

Ordinarily, judicial notice will not be taken of the identity of a particular person.

The courts do not take judicial notice of the identity of persons by reason of identity of Christian names and middle initials,[3] nor that a person involved in the case is identical with a person of the same name mentioned in another reported case.[4] It is a matter of common knowledge, however, that the initial of the second Christian name of a person is frequently omitted.[5]

§ 65. Language, Abbreviations, and Symbols

Particular matters relating to language, abbreviations, and symbols are discussed in detail in the sections immediately following.

Examine Pocket Parts for later cases.

§ 66. Grammar

The rules of grammar are judicially noticed.

Judicial notice may be taken of the generally accepted rules of grammar.[6]

§ 67. Meaning of Words and Phrases

Judicial notice may be taken of the usual meanings of words and phrases.

A judge judicially knows the ordinary meaning of English words,[7] the changes which in popular ac-

Meaning attributable

In proceedings involving meaning of language used by Massachusetts testator in his will, the surrogate concluded that, in absence of factual showing that connotation of words differs in Massachusetts from their connotation in New York, meaning to be attributed to them by courts in both states is identical.—In re Ward's Will, 1 N.Y.S.2d 928, 165 Misc. 949.

Nautical terms

(1) The court judicially knows that word "Bells" is a nautical term for "O'Clock," and that eight bells after midnight means eight o'clock in the morning.—Brooks v. Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co., C.C.A.Cal., 92 F.2d 794.

(2) Admiralty courts may take notice of terms in general use in maritime affairs.—Maryland Casualty Co. v. Lawson, C.C.A.Fla., 101 F.2d 732.

Synonyms

The fact that certain words are used synonymously may be judicially noticed.—Monroe's Adm'r v. Federal Union Life Ins. Co., 65 S.W.2d 680, 251 Ky. 570—23 C.J. p 124 note 25 [b].

Under some statutes judicial notice is taken of meaning of all English words and phrases and all legal expressions.—Rohr v. Stanton Trust & Savings Bank of Great Falls, 245 P. 947, 76 Mont. 248—23 C.J. p 124 note 25 [c].

Well recognized meaning

Court judicially knows that word "budget" has well recognized gen-

ceptation the meaning of words undergoes,[8] and that the same word is susceptible of being used with different meanings.[9] Courts will take judicial notice of the meaning of words and idioms which have acquired a special significance, although such departure from correct usage be confined to particular classes of society;[10] but testimony is necessary where the words have a local meaning different from their ordinary acceptation.[11] Judicial notice may also be taken of matters of common knowledge relating to the names commonly applied to particular things.[12] A term of art or science commonly known is judicially known.[13] Judicial notice may be taken of the legal significance of words,[14] and it is common knowledge that many words have a meaning at law different from that of common speech.[15] The terminology of a particular trade or business is not a matter of which courts can take judicial notice,[16] unless it is a matter of common knowledge.[17]

Slang. Ordinarily the court cannot take judicial notice of the meanings of slang words or expressions,[18] but, where a word, although at first it was used simply as a slang expression and hence was beyond the pale of judicial cognizance, yet has come into such frequent use to convey a particular meaning that it no longer can be considered as simply the language of slang and understood only by the vulgar, the court cannot affect to be ignorant of the meaning thereof.[19]

word, abbreviation, or other symbol which is contrary to the judicial knowledge of the judge.[31]

Marks used by writers and proof readers. The court will take judicial notice of a caret, and if a document has a caret at an interlineation it will be read in the order of the words as indicated.[32]

Printers' marks at the foot of an advertisement, probably placed there in the printing office when it went into the compositor's hands, cannot be given a significance by judicial knowledge.[33]

§ 69. Foreign Language

Courts ordinarily cannot take judicial notice of the meaning of words in a foreign language.

With some exceptions,[34] courts cannot take judicial notice of the meaning of words in a foreign language.[35] They do not know the words in general use,[36] or the proper orthography[37] or the pronunciation[38] of names in a foreign language.

It is common knowledge that the easiest way to learn a foreign language is to associate only with those who speak and use it.[39] Judicial notice is taken that the official language of Mexico is Spanish;[40] and that "attorneys and counselors at law" are ordinarily not known by that title in countries outside the United States.[41]

§ 70. Literature

Judicial notice may be taken of facts of common knowledge relating to literature.

Courts have judicially the same knowledge as the community at large of matters of literature embraced in average education or reading.[42]

judicial notice cannot be taken of such facts unless they are matters of common knowledge.[44] Courts are inclined not to take judicial notice of those facts in the realm of mechanics which would better be presented by the testimony of those who have made special observation therein, or who have had special experience, or who as experts can be more safely trusted to testify as to the truth of a particular fact rather than to rely on an assumed knowledge, which might actually be mistaken.[45]

In patent proceedings or in an infringement suit the court will take judicial notice of all matters of general scientific knowledge;[46] all matters in common use, and all matters of common knowledge;[47] such mechanical devices as are of common knowledge among all;[48] and the nature of a patented invention.[49] On the other hand, as a general rule, judicial notice will not be taken of other matters which must be established by evidence.[50]

§ 72. Nature and Science

Judicial notice of particular facts relating to nature and science are discussed in detail in the sections immediately following.

Examine Pocket Parts for later cases.

§ 73. Course and Laws of Nature

Judicial notice is taken of the unquestioned laws of nature.

Judicial knowledge is taken of the familiar and unquestioned laws of nature and of the existence of facts which must have happened according to the constant course of nature,[51] and judicial notice of ilar matters,[74] in respect of their explosive, inflammable, or combustible nature. On the other hand, judicial notice will not be taken of qualities and properties of matter where such facts are not certain or are not matters of common knowledge.[75]

Judicial notice of facts relating to common articles, devices, utilities, and operations are discussed in § 81 infra.

Intoxicating liquors. Judicial notice will be taken of facts of common knowledge relating to the composition and intoxicating qualities of certain liquors,[76] but judicial notice will not be taken that any beverage called "beer" is intoxicating in fact.[77] The effect of alcohol on the human body may also be judicially noticed.[78] While courts take judicial notice that beer and other alcoholic liquors taken in sufficient quantities will produce intoxication,[79] they cannot be charged as a matter of law with judicial knowledge of the quantity necessary to intoxicate a particular person.[80] Difference in individual susceptibilities to the influence of intoxicating liquor is a fact of common and judicial knowledge.[81] Judicial notice of facts relating to intoxicating liquors in criminal cases is discussed in Criminal Law §§ 535–537.

§ 76. Scientific Facts

Judicial notice will be taken of generally known scientific facts.

Judicial notice will be taken of scientific facts known to all men of ordinary understanding and intelligence,[82] or distinctly recognized in a domes-

Hernia

(1) It is well-known that hernia may be produced from many causes. Straining and heavy lifting are common causes, but severe coughing, sudden falls, and any violent physical action also may bring about conditions terminating in hernia.—Capers v. Arkansas Natural Gas Corporation, La.App., 195 So. 618.

(2) It is a matter of common knowledge that thousands of men suffer from inguinal hernia, and that many of them are able to point to the time and place where it developed and the physical strain or exertion which occasioned it, but yet were never prostrated by it.—Buncle v. Sioux City Stockyards Co., 185 N.W. 139, 192 Iowa 555.

(3) Other facts relating to hernia see 23 C.J. p 146 note 62 [g].

Waste and refuse

(1) The courts take judicial notice of the fact that sewers preserve the health of the residents of a city and elevate their moral tone, and thereby encourage right living.—McMurry v. Kansas City, 223 S.W. 615, 283 Mo. 479.

(2) The court will take judicial notice that the removal of refuse from homes of dwellers in a village will promote sanitary conditions.—Lyman v. Village of Potsdam, 127 N.E. 312, will not be taken of facts relating to human life, health, and faculties which are not matters of common knowledge, which facts must be shown by expert witnesses.[5]

Anthrax. While it is a matter of general knowledge that anthrax is primarily a disease of animals, such as sheep, which may be transmitted to men when handling infected animal materials, like wool,[6] a court or commission is not justified in taking judicial notice that hides such as those in question usually or frequently contain anthrax germs, and that a person working about them with an open wound is likely to receive the germ and die of anthrax.[7]

Period of gestation. Judicial notice will be taken of the ordinary period of gestation,[8] and of the fact that such period is subject to many exceptions.[9] Neither the mean nor the extremes of the period of gestation, however, is so commonly and precisely known that the court may take judicial notice of them.[10]

Tuberculosis. Judicial notice may be taken of facts of common knowledge relating to tuberculosis in humans,[11] such as the existence of tests which will disclose the existence of the infection,[12] that the disease is curable while in its incipient stage,[13] and that many cases of tuberculosis are arrested, and that the patient thereafter can do light work.[14]

Venereal diseases. Judicial notice may be taken of venereal diseases,[15] and of the general course of such diseases.[16] The courts judicially know that syphilis is a serious disease,[17] and that it may be contracted by a person entirely innocent of sexual commerce with one tainted therewith;[18] but they do not judicially know that in every case it increases the risk of loss within the law of insurance,[19] or that a nervous condition is a characteristic of the disease.[20] The courts decline judicially to know the possible effects of a venereal disease,[21] or that gonococcus infection is not communicable except by actual contact.[22]

Vision. Judicial notice may be taken of facts of common knowledge relating to human vision,[23] but judicial notice will not be taken of such facts which are not matters of common knowledge.[24]

Foreign wars

It is common knowledge that a vast majority of the people of the United States are opposed to the country's engaging in a war on foreign soil, and that a vast majority of the students attending some of the leading universities in the United States have gone on record as opposing war except in case the shores of the United States are invaded.—Santana v. Item Co., 189 So. 442, 192 La. 819.

Religious emotions

It is common knowledge that the religious emotions are easily aroused, and when aroused to the prejudice of a party the reason yields to such prejudice, and naturally prevents a jury from acting deliberately and fairly on the issues they must determine.—Ogodzinski v. Gara, 181 N. W. 227, 173 Wis. 371.

the state.[38] Common belief, however, in order to become such common knowledge as to be judicially noticed by the court, must be common in the state, although in a matter pertaining to science it may be strengthened somewhat by the general acceptance of mankind.[39] Local and temporary conditions of public sentiment and local public controversies are not within the class of facts of which the court may take judicial cognizance.[40]

Children and young persons. Judicial notice will be taken of facts of common knowledge relating to children and young persons,[41] such as their capabilities,[42] their habits and curiosity,[43] their needs,[44] their propensities,[45] and differences in the precocity of children.[46] Where it is beyond question that a child is so young that it cannot perform valuable services, the trial court may take judicial notice of the fact;[47] but where there is doubt, especially where it is alleged that the child is precocious, the safer rule is not to take judicial notice but to sub-

Women. Judicial notice will be taken of the sensibility of women to the exposure of their person,[49] and of their resentment to the laying of hands on their person by strangers;[50] that a charge of unchastity must necessarily cause anguish and humiliation to a virtuous woman, enjoying a good name and reputation;[51] that in a condition of advanced pregnancy women are more sensitive and more suspicious than they are at other times;[52] that the physical structure and maternal functions of women place them at such a disadvantage in the struggle for existence as to form a substantial difference between the sexes;[53] and that women are not better qualified than men to resist libidinous approaches.[54] Facts of common knowledge relating to the capabilities of women will also be judicially noticed.[55]

Veracity and mendacity. Judicial notice has been taken that race affords no criterion of the veracity of a witness,[56] and a court cannot affirm of any race of people, of whatever color or condition, that they are always liars.[57] It is common knowledge, however, that enslaved peoples develop an inordinate propensity for lying and that this is characteristic of most oriental nations.[58] Women in general are not judicially known to be addicted to perjury.[59]

§ 81. Common Articles, Devices, Utilities, and Operations

Judicial notice will be taken of facts of common knowledge relating to common articles, devices, utilities, and operations.

The courts judicially notice articles and things in common use and the facts in relation to them which are commonly known.[60] Judicial notice is taken of discoveries and inventions that have become of general and common use, and of the nature and use of common mechanical devices,[61] such as

78. It is common knowledge:
(1) That screens have secondary purpose of protecting persons from falling through window, and that screens constructed and placed in window casing in manner ordinarily done are sufficiently secure to withstand pressure of person leaning against them.—Shaw v. Butterworth, 38 S.W.2d 57, 327 Mo. 622.

(2) That use of removable and adjustable slatted screens at ends of front porch is general for purpose of adding to owner's convenience and comfort in use of porch.—Ash v. Tate, 73 F.2d 518, 64 App.D.C. 9.

79. U.S.—Tower v. U. S., 7 Cust. App. 408.

80. Attachment to realty
It is common knowledge that ranges are ordinarily "attached" to real estate by less substantial connections than an air conditioning and heating system.—Gar Wood Industries v. Colonial Homes, 24 N.E.2d 767, 305 Mass. 41, 126 A.L.R. 591.

81. Tex.—City Nat. Bank v. Pigott, Civ.App., 270 S.W. 234.

82. Chips
Court judicially knows that hammers, whether with round or flat faces, when used to crush rocks will cause chips to fly.—Choate v. City of Springfield, Mo.App., 74 S.W.2d 869.

83. Leaving when first filled
N.H.—Turner v. Globe Automatic Sprinkler Co., 128 A. 529, 81 N.H. 443.

The courts have also taken judicial notice of the use of electricity,[84] of the use of X-rays,[85] and of the use of building materials.[86] It is a matter of common knowledge that refined kerosene is used to furnish light, as fuel for oil stoves, and for kindling fires;[87] that oil is used as furnace fuel;[88] that gas is piped into buildings from underground;[89] that houses are frequently moved from one plot of ground to another;[90] that trapdoors in sidewalks are temporarily opened to place wares in, or remove them from, basements;[91] and that the cleaning and polishing of hardwood floors is expected.[92] Judicial knowledge likewise extends to the general state of development in mechanical arts.[93] The courts, however, will not take judicial notice of particular facts of limited general importance in relation to articles or mechanical devices; judicial notice in this respect is confined to matters of general and common knowledge.[94]

Photography. Where photographs are offered in evidence, courts will judicially notice the art of photography, the mechanical and chemical process employed, the scientific principles on which they are based, and their results.[95] They may judicially notice that all civilized communities rely on photographic pictures for taking and presenting resemblances of persons and of animals, of scenery and of natural objects, of buildings and of artificial objects.[96] They may also notice, as a matter of common knowledge, that under some circumstances photographs may be inaccurate and misleading.[97]

Nuisances. The obnoxious character of certain matters has been held to be of such notoriety that judicial notice might be taken that they constitute a nuisance,[98] but the courts have refused to take

Number of particular county

Supreme court could not take judicial notice that license plate bearing particular number was a particular county number, in absence of proof of anything other than the number.—Putnam v. Bussing, 266 N. W. 559, 221 Iowa 871.

15. Mass.—Wise v. Kennedy, 142 N. E 755, 248 Mass. 83.

However, it has also been held that the court cannot take judicial notice that manufacturer would not use similar numbers on two automobiles, or that it would not place same factory number on two automobiles and at same time use different engine or motor numbers.—Glens Falls Ins. Co. v. Hall, Ky., 79 S.W.2d 383.

Changing

Court judicially knows that automobile identifying number is sometimes destroyed, to prevent tracing or recovery of stolen motor vehicle.—Star Square Auto Supply Co. v. Gerk, 30 S.W.2d 447, 325 Mo. 968.

Only positive identification

Ariz.—C. I. T. Corporation v. Naudack, 38 P.2d 310, 44 Ariz. 413.

16. Anticipation of speed

It is common knowledge that automobiles are operated at times at a speed of approximately sixty miles an hour, and manufacturers of automobile tires must reasonably anticipate that automobiles will be driven at times at such speed.—Nebelung v. Norman, 96 P.2d 327, superseding 89 P.2d 713, 14 Cal 2d 647.

Judicial notice has been taken:

(1) That defective tires frequently cause automobile accidents.—Glazer v. Grob, 3 A.2d 895, 136 Me. 123.

(2) That some automobile tire makers evolved from earlier bicycle tire industry.—Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. v. U. S. Rubber Co., C.C.A. Ohio, 79 F.2d 948, certiorari denied U. S. Rubber Co. v. Firestone Tire & Rubber Co., 56 S.Ct. 945, 298 U.S. 679, 80 L.Ed. 1399, and 56 S.Ct. 946, 298 U. S. 679, 80 L.Ed. 1399.

(3) That tires may give miles of service after sustaining injury.—Newville v. Weller, 251 N.W. 21, 217 Iowa 1144.

(4) That tire punctures frequently occur.—Long v. Steffen, 215 N.W. 892, 194 Wis. 179, 61 A.L.R. 1155.

(5) That used tires are frequently stolen and sold.—City of Chicago v. Peterson, 282 Ill.App. 260.

(6) That the majority of motor vehicles in use on highways of Georgia use pneumatic tires.—Benton Rapid Express v. Sammons, 10 S.E. 2d 290, 63 Ga.App. 23.

Standard of care
Courts judicially know of greatly increased automobile travel, but not that standard of care in keeping highways safe for travel has been lowered.—Beebe v. Kansas City, 17 S.W.2d 608, 223 Mo.App. 642.

18. Hand signals
It is common knowledge that a hand signal can seldom be seen by driver of an on-coming automobile at night when both vehicles have their lights turned on.—Butner v. Spease, 6 S.E.2d 808, 217 N.C. 82.

Windows in curtains
Va.—Virginian Ry. Co. v. Bacon, 157 S.E. 789, 156 Va. 337.

19. Defect
Judicial notice cannot be taken of a defect in an automobile, resulting in the injury complained of, where no defect therein has been shown.—Dr. Pepper Bottling Co. v. Gordy, 164 So. 236, 174 Miss. 392.

Reasonableness of license fee
In determining whether license fee for operating motor vehicles is so unreasonable as to brand act imposing it as revenue measure supreme court cannot take judicial notice of revenue produced, number of motor vehicles in state, amount of fee exacted from each, cost of administering law, etc.—State v. Pepper, 226 P. 1108, 70 Mont. 596.

Judicial notice will not be taken:
(1) Of angle at which spread of good headlights on automobile extends laterally.—Cook v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., Mo.App., 51 S.W.2d 171.

(2) Of how long compression of a truck motor in gear, but not running, will hold when motor is in good condition.—Clairmont v. Cilley, 153 A. 465, 85 N.H. 1.

(3) Of the existence of foot rails in automobiles so constructed as to permit passengers to entangle their legs therein.—Hedges v. Mitchell, 194 P. 620, 69 Colo. 285.

(4) Of time necessary to repair an automobile.—Sherwood v. American Ry. Express Co., 103 So. 436, 158 La. 43.

(5) That a blow-out of the front tire of an automobile running at fifteen miles an hour could not cause the car to run into a ditch alongside the road.—Klein v. Beeten, 172 N.W. 736, 169 Wis. 385, 5 A.L.R. 1237.

(6) That at time and place where collision occurred there was such unusual traffic as to supply evidence of grossness of driver's negligence.—Koger v. Hollahan, Fla., 198 So. 685, 131 A.L.R. 886.

(1) That addition of one more to household consisting of several persons does not necessarily increase cost of maintenance in proportion to addition.—Utah Fuel Co. v. Industrial Commission of Utah, 245 P. 381, 67 Utah 25, 45 A.L.R. 882.

(2) That a man would not expect to be killed for returning home intoxicated.—Riggins v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. of U. S., 14 S.E.2d 182, 64 Ga.App. 834.

(3) That chicken pie usually contains chicken bones.—Mix v. Ingersoll Candy Co., 59 P.2d 144, 6 Cal.2d 674.

(4) That in many families a large portion of community savings are invested in various forms of insurance.—Occidental Life Ins. Co. v. Powers, 74 P.2d 27, 192 Wash. 475, 114 A.L.R. 531.

(5) That marriages of girls sixteen years of age and less are, and have been, of frequent occurrence in Lou-manner of living,[40] the extensive use of polished and waxed hardwood floors furnished with rugs,[41] the placing of a card in a window by those desiring ice,[42] that toilet soaps may be and are used for laundry purposes,[43] that stairs can be mopped without endangering the safety of those having occasion to use them,[44] and that stairways in residences and private homes are not ordinarily barred by gates or lights therein left burning throughout the night.[45] It is a matter of common knowledge that no injury can be inflicted that would be more harmful and result in more material damage to livable premises than to deprive them of the comfort of pure and wholesome water.[46] It is common knowledge that it costs money to rear, nurture, and educate children and that the amount varies according to the ambition, ability, and earning capacity of the parents and the station in life maintained by them.[47] It is also a matter of common knowledge that food, clothing, and expenses in sending a child to school are "necessaries."[48]

§ 85. Dangerous Character of Employment or Operation

Facts of common knowledge relating to the dangerous character of particular employments or operations may be judicially noticed.

The dangerous character of a particular employment or operation,[49] or the comparative danger under different conditions,[50] or the lack of hazard,[51] is sometimes judicially noticed. Only such hazards, however, as are within common knowledge are judicially known;[52] and sometimes judicial notice of a danger or hazard will not be taken without regard to, or in the absence of evidence of, attendant conditions.[53]

§ 86. Private Concerns; Personal or Racial Status or Conditions

Judicial notice will be taken of only such private concerns as are of public interest and of general knowledge.

Judicial notice is not taken of purely private concerns when they are not connected with, or necessarily involved in, a matter of a public nature,[54]

but judicial notice will be taken of such facts when of a public nature and a matter of common knowledge.[55] While judicial notice might be taken that the names of certain persons mentioned in the record were those belonging to an English speaking race, the court could not judicially know that they were citizens of this country,[56] nor does the court judicially know that a person who affixes to his name a title of nobility is a resident of a particular foreign country.[57] The court will not take judicial notice of the legal status of any particular Indian,[58] or of the degree or quantity of Indian blood possessed by any particular person or by the member of any particular Indian tribe.[59] Courts may properly take judicial notice of the relation existing between the white and colored races in the state, or at least in that portion of the state in which they are sitting,[60] and that it is an insult to a white man to charge him with having negro blood in his veins, at least in a state where intermarriage between the races has been long forbidden.[61] Some courts take judicial notice that, viewed from a social standpoint, the negro race is in mind and morals inferior to the Caucasian.[62] It is common knowledge that Japanese do not readily assimilate with other races, especially the white race.[63] The courts do not take judicial notice that there is a violent prejudice against a certain Caucasian race.[64] Judicial notice will not be taken that people of a particular nationality are less intelligent or less capable of looking out for themselves than other nationalities.[65]

§ 87. Phenomena of Other Animal Life

Facts of common knowledge relating to the phenomena of animal life may be judicially noticed.

General facts of natural history relating to the animal kingdom are within the judicial cognizance.[66] Judicial notice is taken of what animals are domestic,[67] and prominent facts in regard to such animals,[68] such as their habits, instincts, and

Difference of opinion among competent authorities as to the cause and character of a certain disease may justify courts in refusing to adjudge the disputed questions by the exercise of judicial cognizance, and subsequent progress of scientific investigation may produce a notoriously unanimous opinion on the same questions so as to require the judicial notice to be taken that was formerly denied.—Grimes v. Eddy, 28 S.W. 756, 126 Mo. 168, 47 Am.S.R. 653, 26 L.R.A. 638—Bradford v. Floyd, 80 Mo. 207—23 C.J. p 155 note 52.

ticed.[75] It is a matter of common knowledge that cockroaches, ants, and other objectionable insects will sometimes appear in dwelling houses to the annoyance of the occupants,[76] and the dangers with which the presence of house flies is fraught is a matter of common knowledge.[77] The characteristics of the gopher will probably not be judicially recognized, but, if that notice were taken, no doubt would be entertained that, when the entrance of such rodent's tunnels was opened up, the animal would attempt with earth to fill the aperture and thus exclude the light.[78]

Wild animals. Judicial notice will be taken of facts of common knowledge relating to wild animals.[79] Sometimes the courts take judicial notice that there are no wild animals of a certain class in the state.[80] The fact that foxes, once captured and escaped, do not have animum revertendi is so well and universally known that the court will take judicial notice thereof.[81]

§ 88. Phenomena of Vegetable Life

Judicial notice may be taken of facts of common knowledge relating to vegetable life.

The courts take judicial notice of the prominent facts of vegetable life[82] and growth.[83] Judicial notice may also be taken of diseases and pests infesting plants within the state, and the usual means of eradicating them.[84] On the other hand, judicial notice will not be taken of such facts as are of minor importance and not actually within the sphere of common observation and knowledge, even though they may be ascertained by reference to technical treatises.[85] Judicial notice of facts relating to agriculture are discussed in § 29 b supra.

Weeds and thistles. The fact that a particular plant is generally regarded as a weed may be judicially noticed.[86] A court may notice generally that in the state, the right of way of railroads has on it more or less dry grass and weeds.[87] The court cannot take judicial notice that a particular locality along a railroad right of way was free from Russian thistles at a particular time, although it may take judicial notice that the thistle grew throughout the state and was a great nuisance.[88]

Perishable nature. The perishable nature of certain vegetables[89] and the fact that vegetable matter

Chlorophyll
The court may judicially notice the fact that "chlorophyll" is the green coloring matter of plants, and that, owing to its instability, it has never been obtained absolutely pure.—U. S. v. One Can of Kololiva, D.C.Mass., 24 F.Supp. 110.

Salt
It is common knowledge that salt deposited on land kills vegetation and renders land sterile.—Paluxy Asphalt Co. v. Helton, Tex.Civ.App., 144 S.W.2d 453, error dismissed, judgment correct.

Poison ivy
(1) Court judicially notices peculiar properties of plant life in so far as they are generally known, and that poison ivy is dangerous and poisonous.—Polizzano v. Mapes Holding Co., 180 A. 419, 421, 115 N.J.Law 352, citing Corpus Juris, and affirmed 182 A. 842, 116 N.J.Law 190.

will decay[90] may be judicially noticed. It is a matter of common knowledge that potatoes are subject to decay,[91] that ventilation is necessary to prevent their decay during transportation by ship,[92] and that, while frozen potatoes have some value for the purpose of immediate consumption, they will not keep.[93] The courts, however, cannot take judicial notice of the fact that onions are perishable property.[94] It is a well recognized fact that fruit for a short time will stand a low degree of temperature without damage, while under a temperature several degrees higher, but prevailing for a longer time, damage will result from the cold.[95]

Trees. Judicial notice will be taken of facts generally known relating to trees,[96] but facts which are of minor importance and not generally known will not be noticed.[97] Judicial notice may well be taken of the fact that banana trees are capable of holding water; but it is not an accepted fact that they naturally and commonly hold water for the length of time and under the circumstances required to breed mosquito larvæ.[98]

§ 89. Private Corporations and Associations and Members Thereof

Judicial notice will be taken of well-known facts relating to associations.

Facts of common knowledge relating to associations generally may be judicially noticed,[99] as may be notice of the organization,[1] name,[2] nature,[3] purposes,[4] and other facts of notoriety[5] of well-known associations; but particular facts about particular associations, which are not matters of common knowledge, cannot be noticed judicially.[6]

§ 90. Charter, Name, and Residence

Judicial notice may be taken of the charter of a corporation where it is a public act.

The courts do not take judicial notice of the provisions of a charter of a private corporation[7] where it is a private act;[8] but they do take judicial notice of a charter where it is a public act,[9] where it is recognized by the constitution of the state,[10] where notice is authorized by rules of court,[11] or where the charter is required by statute to be deposited in the office of the secretary of state.[12] While the court may know what should be in the charter of a corporation organized under a particular law,[13] yet where the court is advised only generally that the corporation is organized under a law permitting organization for different purposes it cannot judicially know the character of the corporation[14] or the contents of its charter.[15]

Name. The name of a corporation is sometimes judicially noticed,[16] but it has been held that it will not be unless the corporation was created by, and named in, a public legislative act.[17] It is common knowledge that corporations frequently do not use the words "incorporated" or "limited" which form a part of their corporate name.[18] Judicial notice will be taken that a name which implies a financial, commercial, or manufacturing organization, which are the usual subjects of incorporation, imports a corporation.[19]

§ 91. Powers and Acts

Judicial notice may be taken of facts of common knowledge and of public statutes relating to the existence, powers, and acts of corporations.

Apart from statutes[21] and court rules[22] requiring judicial notice, the courts, by applying general principles, take judicial notice of matters of common[23]
